Warning as 'creeper' burglaries unlock way to steal cars

By Marijke Cox
marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

CROOKS are burgling people's homes and then rubbing salt into the wound by pinching keys and making their escape in the victim's car.

Now police warn the so-called 'creeper' burglaries are fast becoming one of the most popular ways to steal cars.

Officers say 96 vehicles – five a week – have been either targeted or stolen in this manner in Kent this year so far, a 54 per cent increase on the same period last year.

And living so close to the Channel means some stolen cars can be well into Europe before the victim even wakes up.

The crimes are fuelled by a rise in vehicle security which makes it almost impossible to start modern cars without a key.

Kent Police said criminals typically target high value vehicles – particularly BMWs and Audis – which can be sold on or broken down and the parts sold in the lucrative spare parts market.

Motoring organisation the AA told KoS some cars, once identities are changed, will be shipped as far as China or Africa, where vehicles are right-hand drive, the same as in the UK.

Ian Crowder, from AA Insurance, said the number of cars being stolen might be going down, but the number being stolen by someone stealing keys is on the increase.

"Keys are the weakest link in the car security chain," he said,

"It's almost impossible to steal a modern car without the keys. Never leave them in the front door or even near the front door within easy reach.

"A thief can use a pole to hook them up – keys are worth whatever your car

PLANNING

Fears of a rise in 'garden grabbing' over proposals to relax home extension laws

By Marijke Cox
marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

A PLANNING watchdog has warned that changes to laws over home extensions could lead to a significant rise in neighbour disputes – despite changes being nodded through by MPs this week.

The warning follows a decision by communities secretary Eric Pickles to "water down" proposals which look to ease planning restrictions over the next three years – something the Government believes will help boost the building trade.

Initial plans would have allowed a homeowner to build a bigger extension or conservatory – up to 26ft, double the existing limit – without planning consent being required.

But a rebellion by a group of Tory and Lib Dem MPs – including Conservative MP for Chatham and Aylesford Tracey Crouch – led to an agreed change where councils will have to be notified and agreement from immediate neighbours sought within 21 days.

EXTENSION: There are concerns over plans to 'water down' planning laws

But despite the apparent concession to those concerned, Jamie Weir from planning watchdog Protect Kent, the local branch for the Campaign to Protect Rural England, insists the overall plan is "flawed".

He said: "Around 90 per cent of applications for home extensions are passed, so it is far from impossible to get planning permission if the design and scale of the proposed extension fits into the character of an area.

"Why, if the planning system is working with many home extensions getting quick and simple planning permission, does the Government feel the need to alter it?

"In terms of local impact in Kent, I would imagine these changes, if ushered through, will result in significantly more neighbour disputes as large, badly designed extensions are built in areas which are unsuitable for them.

"Equally, these changes may result in 'garden grabbing' as people attempt to make their existing homes larger so they can sell them for a higher price."

Tracey Crouch was one of the group of MPs against the initial proposals.

She agreed with a House of Lords' amendment to the Growth and Infrastructure Bill which would give people the opportunity to object and the council the chance to step in.

Ms Crouch said: "The Government made a concession so that when somebody wants to build an extension they have to notify the council.

"The council has to notify neighbours – that's anyone who shares any land or boundary with the home.

"It's similar to the current process, looking at issues such as local amenities and whether the extension would overlook private property, things like that.

"I'm not entirely happy but it's better than before."

Asked whether she agreed that the change could create more neighbour disputes, she said: "I think it could have without the change, but I don't think it will now neighbours have the right to object."

Clive Betts, chairman of the communities and local government committee, however, is far from satisfied, despite amendments to the bill.

He has written to Mr Pickles raising concerns over the wider impacts of home extensions.

He said: "Some extensions will have an impact on a neighbourhood that is wider than the immediate impact – for example in terms of making areas more dense and being visible far more widely than by immediate neighbours – and may well have an environmental impact in terms of loss of habitat and green space and prevention of running-off rainfall back to the soil."

Warning: Don't make life easy for burglars is worth; you wouldn't leave £10,000 on a table by the front door, would you?

"With the weather improving, people might be having a barbeque. A thief can just listen for people in the garden and when they see no-one is in the house, they can sneak in and take the keys."

Mr Crowder said three quarters of cars taken are never seen again.

"Being so close to the English Channel, someone could be across to France and Belgium in two hours," he said. "Stolen cars can end up in places like the Middle East or China or Africa."

He said some cars now have tracker devices which can help police find them if taken by thieves.

The rising problem has sparked a warning from Kent Police urging car owners to be vigilant and to make sure homes are locked and car keys hidden.

Of the 96 vehicles, which were stolen, attempted to be stolen or recovered following a theft, 26 were detected. The others, however, disappeared, with identities changed and sold on, subsequently lining the pockets of criminal gangs.

But it's not just the loss of the vehicles which causes a problem, explained Detective Chief Inspector Simon Morris.

He says the trauma of someone going into your home and going through your belongings can have a lasting impact.

"The invasion of personal property often has a long-lasting effect on victims," he said. "We are determined to clamp down on criminals who breach the sanctuary of people's homes and help themselves to items of value.

"Our analysis has shown that in many cases, criminals have targeted properties where windows and doors haven't been properly secured, and entry has been easily gained.

"We urge householders to secure their homes at night before going to bed and leave car keys out of sight."

Tom Smith, from Herne Bay, became a victim of "creeper burglary".

The 29-year-old said it made him feel uncomfortable in his own home: "I took a weapon to bed and for the first couple of nights I didn't sleep much. It was made even worse when we found out they'd had guns."

■ Two people from Medway recently appeared in court charged in connection with so-called "creeper burglary".

A 17-year-old, of no fixed address, pleaded guilty to one count of house burglary and a further 28 offences, including theft from motor vehicles and house burglaries in Medway and Swale.

Chatham nightclub promoter, Jason Ross, has been charged with 25 house burglaries and stealing eight cars. The offences occurred in Medway, Gravesend and Larkfield between December 15 and March 2.

The 25-year-old has been remanded in custody until his plea and case management hearing at the end of May.

Di Canio ref: I made Paolo famous

Now an award-winning town centre boss in Maidstone, Paul Alcock breaks his silence to comment on a week of footballing controversy

Exclusive by Joe Bill
joe.bill@archant.co.uk

FORMER Premier League referee Paul Alcock found himself back in the headlines and on TV screens after a week of football controversy – and joked that he was the one responsible for making Paolo Di Canio a household name.

Mr Alcock, a senior figure at a Maidstone shopping complex, traditionally refuses to talk about his successful career on the pitch as one of the game's top officials.

But he broke his silence this week to KoS to discuss Mr Di Canio and the 10-match ban handed to Liverpool forward Luis Suarez.

The striker sensationally bit an opponent during a televised match last weekend.

It prompted much debate over some of the sport's most high profile controversies.

In addition to Eric Cantona's famous karate kick at a fan, footage was shown of Mr Di Canio pushing over Mr Alcock during a game 14 years ago. The fiery Italian earned himself, in addition to a red card, an 11-match ban and a £10,000 fine. Now 44, the star recently returned to the Premier League as manager of Sunderland.

Mr Alcock, manager of The Mall Chequers in Maidstone and chairman of its Town Centre Management team, told us: "People move on in life but there is always something that comes back and bites you. Whenever his name is mentioned I seem to get dragged in, but I suppose I was the one responsible for his rise to fame."

As for advice on how to handle Luis Suarez?

"I'd suggest to his manager that he is fed before each game," he quipped.

Meanwhile, Mr Alcock recently picked up a lifetime achievement award for his work in Maidstone town centre at the Kent Community Safety Awards, organised by Kent Police.

He added: "It was a very proud moment, just being nominated, but to win was beyond my expectations. It makes all of the work to help keep our town safe and secure worthwhile."

MOMENT OF INFAMY

Paul Alcock became forever tied to the career of Paolo Di Canio in September 1998.

The Italian was playing for Sheffield Wednesday in a league clash against Arsenal at Hillsborough when a furious Di Canio pushed the referee and sent him tumbling onto the turf. The footage was beamed around the world.

Fans given three-year football ban for drunken pitch invasion

TWO men who climbed over the perimeter fence at a Gillingham league game before running the entire length of the pitch and sliding on their knees in front of the goal at the Rainham End, have been banned for three years.

Both were hit with the football banning orders for their drunken exploits – preventing them from attending any game in the professional divisions, home and abroad, for three years.

Ryan Kelly, 27, of Trafalgar Square, and Leon Cooper, 27, of Linden Road, both Gillingham, were arrested after running onto the pitch during the League 2 clash at Priestfield against Accrington Stanley on March 23.

The court heard that during the second half of the game, Kelly and Cooper ran onto the pitch from the Brian Moore Stand to the other end of the field and slid on their knees in front of the goal at the Rainham End.

They were escorted off the pitch by club officials and arrested by police.

JUSTICE: The two fans ran the length of the pitch before sliding on their knees in front of the goal at the Rainham End

Both men admitted to the charges at Medway Magistrates' Court on Wednesday, which means they are now banned from attending any football match in England and Wales and overseas for the next three years.

The banning order includes all games from Blue Square South level, which is the second tier of non-league football, upwards.

The orders are a preventative measure designed to stop potential troublemakers from travelling to and attending football matches, both at home and abroad. Anyone who commits a football-related offence can be arrested and a football banning order applied for.

Kent Police football liaison officer, PC Geoff Greensmith, said: "Both Kelly and Cooper, who were clearly intoxicated when they ran onto the pitch, claimed they were unaware that it was a criminal offence.

"They are now fully aware that it is and hopefully this will send out a message to others that this will not be tolerated.

"You will be arrested and brought before the courts and face being banned not just from the club you follow, but all football from the top tiers of the non-league game upwards."

The college, part of the Swale Academy Trust, said pupils had been "extremely upset".

Movie star Orlando Bloom adds his support to City of Culture 2017 bid

By Marijke Cox

marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

HOLLYWOOD star Orlando Bloom has joined a list of big names to lend their support to a bid by east Kent to become the UK City of Culture 2017.

The actor, who grew up in Canterbury, said it was in east Kent where he discovered his love for acting, which led him to roles in blockbusters including the Lord of the Rings trilogy and Pirates of the Caribbean.

East Kent towns, Ashford, Canterbury, Folkestone and Margate, have teamed up to bid to win the prestigious title, awarded once every four years.

Success would see an enormous publicity injection as well as the chance to host key cultural events such as the Man Booker Prize and the Turner Prize.

Mr Bloom said: "Growing up in east Kent awakened my passion – I hope this bid can do the same for generations to come."

Others backing the bid include TV star Paul O'Grady and musician Jools Holland.

Designer Wayne Hemingway and award-winning architect Sir David Chipperfield have already publicly voiced their support.

This week will see the first submission which will involve a region-wide cultural tour. See www.eastkent2017.co.uk for more.

SUPERSTORE

Tesco conundrum:

Despised by some but essential for others,

By Nick Ames

nick.ames@archant.co.uk

THE seemingly relentless march of supermarket giant Tesco across the county may finally have slowed, courtesy of a wave of public opposition and a painful black eye delivered by an apathetic American public.

When the company announced a sharp drop in its profits earlier this month – the first time it has fallen in 20 years – it blamed a highly costly foray into the US market; the fall-out of which would impact on its UK ambition.

Its hopes of establishing itself as a rival to the likes of Walmart came to an undignified end when it pulled out of its loss-making Fresh & Easy stores at a cost of £1.2 billion.

The profit plummet immediately signalled the end of a number of planned developments across some 100 sites in the UK – including at least one in Kent.

Yet while many will rejoice at the news, others will see their best laid plans go up in smoke.

For every campaign group opposing the chain's presence in their towns or in their high streets leaving, as one critic puts it, "empty shops like broken teeth along the high street", there are supporters who point to more choice and value and their ability to act like a honeypot for shoppers and breathing renewed life into dramtically declining high streets.

Campaigns against proposed sites in Paddock Wood, Whitstable, Margate, Edenbridge and a remarkable sixth branch in Gravesham, are all on-going.

Peter Campbell is a member on Thanet District Council. He put forward the motion to reject planning permission for a proposed Tesco Express store in Westgate-on-Sea. It ultimately proved successful.

He said: "It was in the wrong place, in the wrong style and had the wrong design.

"There was a lot of vocal public opinion against the proposal, which did not fit in with Victorian Westgate."

Just down the road, however, and an 82,000-sq-ft 24-hour store has also been proposed for Margate seafront – forming a key component of an overhaul of Arlington House. But following opposition, it is now the subject of a review by local government minister Eric Pickles.

Louise Oldfield, of campaign group Friends of Arlington Margate, explains why there is such opposition: "The size of the store would badly hit existing local businesses and the amount of traffic – 18,000 extra vehicles on a Friday and Saturday – would halt plans for a part pedestrianised seafront introduced to promote a café-culture and attract tourists."

Independent Thanet councillor Ian Driver added: "Tesco has more than enough of a presence here. There are shops at Westwood Cross, in Ramsgate, Broadstairs and Cliftonville. People I have been speaking to feel Tesco should not be hoovering up properties and driving local businesses to the wall. Enough is enough."

And it's not just Tesco-branded stores which rile local folk.

Tesco has a part stake – believed to be around 40 per cent – in the coffee chain Harris + Hoole which wants to open an outlet in the former Clinton's card store in Whitstable. Planning permission for a change of signage has been granted, but no further applications are necessary as the site is already designated for retail.

Objection has come from Save Whitstable Shops, which says the chain is "a wolf in sheep's clothing" because of the superstore's stake.

Is it saint or sinner?

Nick Ames looks at split views on supermarket

GOOD OR BAD? While many campaign against Tesco stores and their impact on communities, others point to the benefits of such development

Campaigner Brian Hitcham said: "This town has built its reputation on independent stores and people will be fooled into thinking they are going into a small, independently-run coffee shop when in fact that is not the case at all."

Campaigners have called for a boycott of the shop when it does open.

Yet for all the opposition, few cheers were heard when Tesco announced one of the high-profile casualties of its expensive American adventure would be plans for a £110m store at Milton Creek, Sittingbourne.

It pulled the plug just last week on the store and extension of the Forum shopping centre, which it owns.

While the local council was trying to put a brave face on the situation – the planning permission had been held up since late 2011 due to an issue over roads – others were privately saying Tesco's decision was a "huge blow".

Director of regeneration at Swale Borough Council, Pete Raine, said: "We are relieved the uncertainty surrounding this proposal has now ended, and that we can in future look at the site with a fresh pair of eyes.

"In the meantime, we will continue to progress our plans for development south of the railway line with our partners Spirit of Sittingbourne, and we are confident the Tesco decision will not throw those off course. In this context, we welcome Tesco's continued commitment to their store in the Forum."

Tesco has also bought the leaseholds of small businesses on a parade of shops in Paddock Wood and has indicated plans for a new store, while another development project has been earmarked for Edenbridge.

However, both schemes are still in the planning stage and a number of objections have been voiced by people concerned about the impact on small businesses – although some welcomed the proposals as a key weapon in bringing people back into retail hubs.

Tesco, however, remained unmoved by the emotions it triggers.

In a statement, the firm simply said: "We are very proud to serve thousands of customers every day through our Kent stores, providing a vital service for the many local people who choose to shop with us.

"We know our stores bring shoppers to local areas and are pleased other local businesses can take advantage of the customers we attract."

But Steve Dawe of the Kent Green Party encapsulates many of the views of its opponents: "The constant expansion of supermarket giants is killing smaller shops.

"Research shows that after five years of operation a superstore achieves a net loss within a five mile radius of 250 jobs by eliminating small businesses, such as butchers, grocers and coffee shops – the things that give variety to a town.

"What is left is empty shops like broken teeth along the high street."

The county seems destined to remain a battlefield, not just for the likes of Tesco, but for other major supermarket chains too. Whether the tide of development has turned for good, remains to be seen.

Family reveals agony as court jails brutal killer of 'our beloved Natalie'

By Marijke Cox
marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

VICTIM: Natalie Jarvis

RELATIVES of a 24-year-old woman stabbed to death say the family has been "horrifically ripped apart" by her "senseless savage slaughter".

The comment came as Adam Whelehan, 23, from Sidcup, was jailed for 26 years after being found guilty of the murder of his girlfriend Natalie Jarvis in an attack in a quiet Swanley street last October.

A jury heard she had been stabbed a total of 19 times in her neck.

In a statement following sentencing on Thursday, Miss Jarvis' family said: "Natalie was the most amazing person anyone could wish to meet. She was beautiful inside and out. Her smile and laughter were infectious and the love she had for life, and everyone in her life, was overwhelming.

"Our family has been horrifically ripped apart by the senseless savage slaughter of the most loving sister and daughter anyone could ask for. No sentence is long enough for Adam Whelehan. We cannot get our beloved Natalie back."

Whelehan had driven to Swanley with co-defendant Thomas Fuller, of Eltham, on October 3 to meet Miss Jarvis to discuss their relationship. By 11.15pm she was dying from stab wounds. Fuller was found not guilty of murder.

DI Gavin Moss said: "Whelehan is a young man, but will be spending the rest of his youth exactly where he deserves to be – in prison."

Former Page Three model explains how God guided her away from a life hooked on heroin

By Joe Bill
joe.bill@archant.co.uk

MEET her today, and Susie Flashman Jarvis would appear to be the model of respectability.

Well dressed and a devoted Christian, she works as a therapist and counsellor in leafy Tunbridge Wells, after nearly a decade running a pre-school group for toddlers.

But her past is full of glitz, glamour, drugs and fame.

After growing up in Tonbridge, during her youth in the 1970s and 80s, she was a hugely successful model – fronting high-profile campaigns for diamond company De Beers, body spray Impulse and taking part in photo shoots around the world.

And for a few short months she modelled for the Sun's Page Three.

Now 56 and a mother-of-four, a chance mention of her past would be the trigger to her penning a book looking back at the highs of a glamorous life, and the lows of an addiction to heroin.

Potholes and Belly-flops plots her struggle to move on from her wild past and was written in response to topless pictures of her being found on the internet seven years ago.

She explains to KoS: "I had a conversation with someone and mentioned what I used to do.

THEN AND NOW: Susie Flashman Jarvis

They went on the internet and put my name into Google and, hey presto, there they were. Up to that point I had no idea they still existed. I was gobsmacked I was on there, absolutely horrified.

"I'm a Christian and I work as a therapist and a counsellor. I have been doing that for around 12 years and when it all came out I felt really ashamed of it all.

"I was quite successful as a model, but I only did Page Three for about six months; it was a small part of my work, and all a very long time ago. There was no internet then so it was very shocking to see them on there."

During her career, Mrs Flashman Jarvis worked alongside Men Behaving Badly TV star and fellow model Leslie Ash on a commercial project for hairspray in the US, starred in bikini and underwear catalogues and also appeared in adverts in Holland and Japan.

But in addition to the successes were dark times too.

"I drifted into heroin from recreational drugs," she explains. "It was very separate to my modelling world though. It was my private life.

"My book is about what it's like to be a Christian when you have a past. How to live in the present while facing up to the fact you have a history and moving beyond it."

And it was religion which, she says, changed her life.

"I had an encounter with God," she admits, "I was healed from my drug addiction after that. It changed everything.

"I moved back down to Tunbridge Wells from London. I met my husband and had four children.

ON THE STREETS: Although there has been a rise in begging in the county town, there has not been a rise in the number of homeless, according to the charity Porchlight

SOCIAL PROBLEMS

Increase in beggars is creating atmosphere of fear on our streets

By Marijke Cox
marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

BEGGARS are harassing hard-working people in our county town by claiming to be homeless and in need, warns a homelessness charity.

Canterbury-based Porchlight told KoS it was aware of a number of people who were not genuinely homeless – as they have access to family and accomodation – but instead were begging and squatting in Maidstone.

It came as Maidstone Town Centre Management (TCM) raised concerns about members of the public feeling intimidated by beggars at cash machines.

TCM chiefs said there had been a "noticeable increase" in homeless people visible in the town and problems such as street defecation and needles from drug taking being discarded.

Town centre manager Bill Moss explained: "There certainly has been a substantial increase in street begging in the past few months, and information that these aren't genuine homeless people is bang on.

"The main problem is members of the public feel sorry for them and willingly pass over quite hefty amounts of money to them. I'm told some of them can 'earn' as much as £200 per day by begging on the streets, which I'll bet is more than many of the people handing over their money earn.

"Maidstone has a strong history of helping less fortunate people. Everybody who is currently 'on the streets' is being interviewed to see what help or support is needed and then appropriate agencies are called in.

"Nobody likes to see 'homeless' people huddled in shop doorways and nobody likes to be asked for money by beggars – therefore it must be having a detrimental effect on visitors to the town and therefore on businesses."

Porchlight, which offers support services to rough sleepers in Kent, said it was working closely with Maidstone Borough Council's community safety team to provide support to a group of homeless people in the town.

It said all those on the streets were known to the charity and that Porchlight was helping them to access suitable accommodation.

"We currently know of and are helping 27 people in the Maidstone area who are homeless," a spokeswoman said.

"At present, Maidstone has the highest number of rough sleepers in the county and we are working with 183 people across Kent and Medway."

The spokeswoman said the charity was, however, aware of a number of people who were not genuinely homeless but appeared to be begging on the streets of Maidstone or squatting.

"We are working with other agencies and the council to help resolve this situation," she said.

"Across Kent, we are seeing an increase in the social problems of begging, squatting and genuine homelessness, and they are becoming more visible. However, over the past nine months, referrals into our rough sleeper service in Maidstone have remained fairly consistent."

People living in the town have reported seeing a tent erected outside the now-empty Blockbuster store on Week Street as well as an increase in sleeping bags and evidence of rough sleeping in doorways in the same area.

The Porchlight spokeswoman said: "People who have spent longer on the streets tend to have belongings that make sleeping rough a little easier, such as tents."

Kent Police said a 46-year-old man, Elan Santos Muir, from Gravesend, was arrested on March 4 for begging in Week Street. He was arrested and charged with begging again on March 6, when he was also charged with using words or behaviour causing harassment, alarm and distress. Muir was due to appear in court on Friday.

Chief Inspector Jon Bumpus said: "Where our officers come across incidents of begging, or have begging reported to us, we will investigate and take appropriate action. Kent Police is also working with Maidstone council and our other partners to find solutions for the homeless."

HOMELESSNESS

Maidstone is not the only place to see the homeless setting up camp in disused sites.

The old Peugeot dealership and petrol station on Rheims Way in Canterbury has attracted one homeless person who has built a shelter, including a tent and even a house plant.

The disused site is due for development consisting of five blocks for university student accommodation.

In February, homeless man Daniel Gauntlett, 35, died in freezing temperatures on the doorstep of an empty bungalow in Aylesford.

Shock was felt in the community as to how someone in such poverty was unable to gain the support needed to avoid such a tragedy.

Conservative Party

by Paul Carter, leader of KCC

AS WE fast approach polling day on Thursday, May 2, it is clear to me voters have a number of important national issues, as well as local issues, concerning them.

The state of the national economy and unemployment among young people is clearly a big issue. If re-elected, we will need to increase the very good momentum to date in creating more Kent jobs for Kent young people – our apprenticeship programme has been the most successful in the country.

Our support to the Kent economy is also creating new job opportunities: the £50 million interest-free loan fund in east Kent and the Thames Gateway will deliver 8,000 new jobs.

On Europe there is broad support for the Prime Minister's pledge of a referendum, but a strong feeling this should be sooner than 2017. I would like to see a bill introduced in Parliament that would force an earlier referendum.

Equally important, David Cameron must tell us what changes need to be made in a new relationship with our European partners.

To me, the current terms are outdated and failing member states.

Locally, voters are pleased the Conservatives at County Hall have been able to freeze council tax for three consecutive years, and recognise the good progress in improving education outcomes for all our young people, as well as the need to continue to expand school places.

Here immigration raises its head: I would like to see the national government set out the restrictions they talk about placed upon Bulgarians and Romanians from January 1, 2014.

Now the weather has improved, the 'Find and Fix' pothole gangs will work at full speed – the job will be done effectively as we did two years ago after a similar harsh winter. Please be patient, we have 5,000 miles of road to repair.

We will continue to support Kent families and Kent business, boosting Kent jobs and opportunities for all.

Labour Party

by Gordon Cowan, Labour leader at KCC

AFTER many years in control, the Conservatives on Kent County Council have run out of new ideas. Too many decisions taken behind closed doors, with few members of the public attending public meetings – in all, a recipe for complacency and inefficiency.

The Conservatives have cut £95m out of the budget of frontline services, they have frozen council tax to get your vote, but what you are really getting is less for your money.

Senior staff have been given massive pay-offs, but the most vulnerable people in Kent are going without: £18.5m has been slashed from the budget that provides essential services and support for the elderly and disabled. What's more, the Conservatives are going to pay consultants £5.4m for advice on how to cut that budget.

Youth unemployment is at almost one million yet the Conservatives at KCC have cut the youth centres' budget by £1m.

Through bursaries, a Labour county council would reinstate the allowance that helped students from poorer backgrounds buy school books and bus fares to college. Labour would also expand the number of apprentices at KCC and widen the graduate scheme.

Labour will campaign to raise the age threshold for free travel to 18 at all times of the day and to extend the Kent freedom pass to cover 16 to 19-year-olds, on buses as well as trains.

Labour says nobody wants a 10-years-and-one-month-old child sitting an exam one day in September which decides their educational future. We say that can't continue and that the Kent Test must go.

A Labour-led KCC will retain a strong commitment to our children's centres and nursery classes attached to schools; we will protect sports fields from development, while encouraging school sports at all levels.

We will undertake a comprehensive programme of road repairs – the huge number of potholes on major and minor roads make us look like a third world country – and in the longer term we will encourage freight to switch from road to rail.

Labour has a manifesto that represents a real change in the way Kent would be run with power put in the hands of local people, more openness and transparency in the council's services and a new determination to restore the sense of pride in our county that has been so diminished under the Conservative rule.

Liberal Democrats

by Trudy Dean,
Lib Dem leader at KCC

LIB Dems have been appalled at the level of secret decision-making in KCC and would insist all possible meetings are held in public and webcast, and that the public can email in questions during the meetings.

This includes the locality boards held in each borough to coordinate borough and county council services, many of which are held in private.

We would also give the public the right to speak and ask questions at county council meetings, reduce the number of signatures required on petitions which trigger a debate, and ensure the Scrutiny Committee is chaired by the opposition not at present by the Conservatives, who block many attempts to question decisions. All contracts should be awarded in open competition.

Maintenance of roads would be a high priority, including restoring the budget cut of £1.6m in road repairs and extending the network which is gritted during icy weather.

Speeding traffic is a constant worry to many people because of noise vibration and pollution as well as safety, and we want improved enforcement of speed limits and the introduction of 20mph limits outside all schools and hospitals and in residential and shopping areas where residents support them.

We want to see Government restore countryside protections removed by the Labour government, reinforce the protections of the green belt and extend it to reflect the increasing pressure from house building in the south east.

KCC under the Conservatives has been much criticised for placing children in care at risk of serious harm, of having one of the worst levels of primary school performance in the country, and one of the worst records in the country for giving children from poorer backgrounds the opportunity to keep up with their peers.

Lib Dems want to focus on raising standards in all those areas.

The policy of allowing elderly and vulnerable adults to remain at home for as long as they can is the right one.

But Lib Dems want to make sure that the decision on care at home or in a residential establishment must be made on the basis of need and not of cost.

Caring for people at home places a great burden on family and friends as carers, and we believe that respite 'holidays' from that responsibility should be more easily available.

KOS COMMENT

This looks to be one of the more interesting county council elections in recent history.

While the Conservatives are unlikely to lose control, it's a difficult call on how the other parties will fare. The Tories could lose a number of seats, vastly reducing their majority, but retaining outright control.

Labour is likely to make some headway in gaining back some of those 19 seats lost in the 2009 elections, when the party was practically wiped off the council – a response by the public to disillusionment within the national party and the then-Prime Minster Gordon Brown. If it overhauls the Lib Dems it will no doubt proclaim it a triumph.

The Lib Dems saw popularity dip in the 2011 local elections following the formation of the Coalition at national level.

But more recent by-elections have shown support growing again which could mean some gains on Kent County Council.

Ukip is the one to watch this election. Predications are the party could take some Tory seats with disillusioned Conservative supporters likely to defect.

But with Europe top of Ukip's agenda, it could be that voters are unsure what the party can do on a local level.

Kent Greens are so far unrepresented on KCC, but this could be its year to gain perhaps one seat in what would be a surprising outcome.

UK Independence Party

By Piers Wauchope, member of Tunbridge Wells Borough Council

A VOTE for Ukip in these elections is a vote to bring democracy back to local level.

The Government is pushing councils to build new homes by giving them a bonus for each new unit built.

To get the Government money, Tunbridge Wells Borough Council has "identified the need for 6,500 new homes" to be built by 2026.

Developers have bought greenfield sites with no planning permission and now want to take advantage of the Conservatives' new planning rules. Ukip would decide planning issues by binding local referendums.

Don't reward the Conservatives for our poor schools. Lack of opposition and scrutiny on the council has allowed the Conservatives to get away with doing a bad job. Classed by Ofsted as the 10th worst primary school provider in the country, Kent proposes to cram hundreds of new pupils into existing schools.

For too long new building schemes have provided no new jobs and no new apprenticeships for local people. Kent's promise to ensure that jobs will be provided for local people on new build schemes is not being applied, because they refuse to monitor the developers.

Ukip insists this must change.

Green Party:

by chairman of Kent Green Party, Stuart Jeffery

KENT has suffered in the hands of the Conservatives.

Whether it is the air pollution generated by the ridiculous amount of traffic on our roads – air pollution that kills around 700 people in our county each year – or the road traffic accidents that killed or seriously injured more than 500 people in 2011; the appalling cost and poor service people using public transport have to put up with; the cost of living; the lack of jobs or the continued assaults on our environment; it is clear the Conservatives have failed us all.

Kent Greens will tackle all these problems head on. We will reduce accidents and pollution on residential streets by introducing 20mph limits where people live, just as other councils up and down the country have. We will invest in public transport, broadband in rural areas, cycle lanes and better pavements to make it possible to leave the car at home more often.

We are the party that cares about people, where we live and how we live. We want a society that is fair and an economy that provides real jobs.

HEAVYWEIGHT SUPPORT FROM PICKLES AND HARMAN

MORE of the main political parties' big hitters came to Kent this week in a last-ditch attempt to persuade the electorate who they should vote for ahead of Thursday's election.

Communities and local government secretary Eric Pickles visited Sittingbourne and Gravesend to rally support for the Conservatives.

"It was a pleasure coming to Kent," he said.

"The county council here works hard for its residents and leads and innovates in many areas."

Deputy leader of the Labour Party and shadow culture secretary, Harriet Harman, dropped into Dover to rally support.

She told KoS: "I think we could see how people voted in the 2010 elections that people felt Labour was out of touch.

"We've had a lot of support in Kent in the past, but so many seats were lost in 2009.

"It was a wake-up call that we needed to get back in touch. There's been a real change and we're putting contestants up for almost every seat (in Kent).

"I think we can tell that people don't see Labour as a strong voice on the council and we take this very seriously. We do believe there does need to be a strong opposition.

"It's important we have Labour representatives who are not just apologising all the time, but understanding what needs to be done for the people in Kent."

HISTORY

Some 1,000 years after it was written, historic charter finally returns to city home

By Nick Ames
nick.ames@archant.co.uk

A UNIQUE Anglo-Saxon document written in Canterbury almost 1,000 years ago has finally returned home.

The Godwine Charter records the sale of land from a man named Godwine to Leofwine the Red. Written between 1013 and 1020 it is regarded as historically important as it provides a rare insight into Anglo-Saxon daily life.

Written in old English, it also allows scholars to examine the evolution of the language.

Consisting of five lines written in brown ink on vellum, the charter records the transaction as witnessed by Lyfing, the Archbishop of Canterbury and other churchmen including the abbot of St Augustine's, monks, noblemen and prominent citizens – listed as "many good men".

The land is described as a "swine pasture" in Swithraedingden, which is most likely to be the modern Southernden, close to Headcorn.

Rent for the field is recorded as two pounds forty pence and a measure of corn.

The document was acquired at auction from a private individual by Canterbury Cathedral Archives following a £114,500 grant from the National Heritage Memorial Fund.

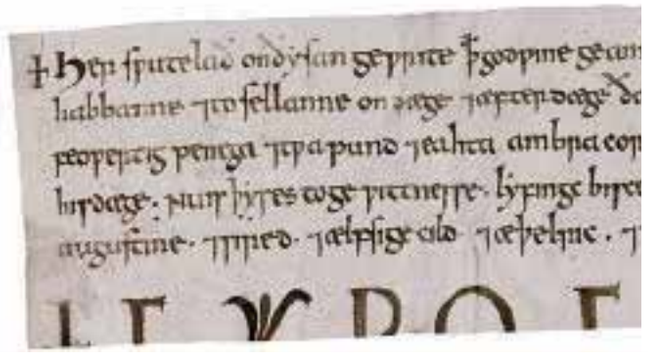

It will go on display at the Beaney Art Gallery and Museum from mid-June, but is likely to be exhibited in the cathedral prior to that.

Around the time it was written, Canterbury was an important place of worship and commerce, but it was just recovering from a Viking raid in 1011, which saw the city burnt and the cathedral destroyed after a three-week siege.

Simon Keynes, professor of Anglo-Saxon at the University of Cambridge, said: "This is a thoroughly local charter from Canterbury, and it would have the power to inspire those who see it to take further interest in their past. I hope the successors to the 'many good men within the city' will enjoy seeing this document, and imagining themselves in Canterbury 1,000 years ago."

Canterbury Cathedral will be holding a public lecture on its Anglo-Saxon charters later this year, as well as a family activity day, when experts will relate them to archaeological finds.

Christopher Irvine, canon librarian, added: "We are delighted to be able to bring the Godwine Charter home, where it can tell its story to all who see it. It is an important part of the heritage of our cathedral, and indeed of our city."

HISTORIC: The Godwine Charter is written in old English and offers an insight into daily life in Anglo-Saxon times

HISTORIC RECORDS

Records of baptisms, marriages and burials from Canterbury dating back to 1538 have now been put online by leading family history site findmypast.co.uk.

They include almost 900,000 baptisms, 100,000 banns, 500,000 marriages and 700,000 burials.

Among the famous figures appearing are playwright Christopher Marlowe, cricketer Fuller Pitch, poet and artist Dante Gabriel Rossetti and Sir George Rooke, Admiral of the Fleet who captured Gibraltar.

Unusual information includes a statement from a vicar, Thomas Patten, about the marriage in 1744 between John Housden "a young gape-mouthed lazy fellow" and Hannah Matthews "an old toothless wriggling hagg".

Historian Debra Chatfield said: "This collection of records is an extraordinarily rich resource for family and local historians and is an important resource for tracing the history of the east Kent area."

Scally: I was so happy I slept with the trophy

By Greg Miles
greg.miles@archant.co.uk

GILLINGHAM chairman Paul Scally has barely let the League Two trophy out of his sight since lifting it on Saturday, even cradling it in his sleep in his Priestfield office when the celebrations came to an end.

It is just the second time in the club's history that it has won a league title, and it comes nearly 50 years after their first.

After a dominant season they were guaranteed promotion from League Two two weeks ago, but quickly set their sights on the silverware.

They did it the hard way, drawing 2-2 against relegation-threatened AFC Wimbledon which was enough to ensure they will finish out of the reach of second place Port Vale.

It sparked a good-natured pitch invasion from the club's biggest home attendance in nearly 10 years.

"It was a magical day," Mr Scally said. "I would say in my sporting career it beats the days out we have had at Wembley. To be the champions in front of a capacity crowd was fantastic.

"We had a party afterwards, I remember everything up until about 11pm. I know I had the trophy and, by mistake, walked into a private function taking place at Priestfield.

"It has given us a huge lift. I ended up sleeping with the cup in the my office, I woke up with it."

WELL DONE: Fans wore Martin Allen masks; chairman Paul Scally presented the trophy, and everyone - fans, staff and players – celebrated

COMPETITION

Do you have a story to tell?

CONTEST: Kick start your writing career with a 100-word short story

WRITING a novel is a challenge. More specifically, it is about an 80,000-word challenge.

But what if you've got an idea for a story that is a little bit shorter?

Kent County Council is launching a competition, running in May, for very short stories. In fact very, very short stories.

Anyone can enter – the only restriction is that your story should be no longer than 100 words.

And if 100 words sounds a bit too brief, that's part of the fun.

The competition will run throughout May, which is National Share a Story Month, with the winners expected to be announced in mid-June.

Entries will be invited in four age categories, up to school Year 2, Year 3 to Year 6, Year 7 to Year 11 and everyone else. There is no upper age limit; if you can write, you can take part.

Winners will see their stories printed in the pages of this newspaper, and broadcast on Radio Kent. Further prizes are being finalised.

Judging duties will be shared by Kent County Council and Kent on Sunday.

Patrick Leeson, KCC corporate director for education, learning and skills, said: "Listening to stories is one of the earliest memories for many of us. Developing our own ability to write stories is a natural progression of these early childhood experiences and one that allows us to tell our own unique stories.

"Fostering a love of reading and writing is at the core of all who work with children and young people and we are therefore delighted to be promoting a project that encourages chidren to explore their thoughts and experiences in writing.

"The 100-word story competition is all about taking that natural instinct for telling stories and encouraging everyone to turn it in to something fun – and to do a little bit for literacy in the process."

Chris Britcher, editor of this newspaper, added: "We're delighted to be teaming up with KCC to help support this competition.

"Writing a novel is an intimidating prospect – writing a story in 100 words should be less so, but no less challenging. We're looking forward to reading what both young and old alike can achieve in such a short amount of space."

To give you a sense of the challenge, the words in this article amount to around 450.

The competition is running at the same time as Share a Story Month, an initiative from the Federation of Children's Book Groups.

■ More information about the competition is available at www.kent.gov.uk/100words where you can also find an online entry form and a postal address, if you would prefer not to enter online.

Cheese on toast snack sparks blaze drama

A PECKISH woman who wanted a snack of cheese on toast got more than she bargained for, when she left it cooking under a grill.

Fire crews rushed to the scene in Oak Tree Road, Ashford, where they found the cooker alight.

Ashford Watch manager Mark Thomas said: "We believe the woman had put cheese on toast under the grill but then went to talk to a neighbour."

The woman, in her 50s, was unharmed and the fire quickly brought under control.

Tributes pour in for Mike Denness after county cricket club's 'Mr Cool' loses battle with cancer

greg.miles@archant.co.uk

TRIBUTES came flooding in this week for Mike Denness, the former Kent and England cricket captain whose death was announced last Friday.

In what was due to be his last week as president of the county club, Mr Denness died after a battle with cancer. He was 72.

A hugely influential player, he captained Kent during its glory days of the 1970s, a time when the county was its most dominant in the domestic game.

During his time at the club they won six trophies, while he was named Wisden Cricketer of the Year in 1975, by the famous almanack, and received an OBE for his services to the game in the last New Year's Honours List.

Born in Bellshill in Lanarkshire, he became the first Scotsman to captain England and once famously dropped himself from the side during the Ashes tour of 1974-75 after a loss; another first for a Test captain.

The Ashes side which lost the series 4-1, comprised of a host of his Kent team-mates; among them Brian Luckhurst, Derek Underwood and Alan Knott.

"He had that extra quality that allowed him to play Test cricket," said Mr Underwood, 67, who played alongside Mr Denness through the 60s and 70s.

HIS SUCCESS

Titles as Kent captain:
John Player League 1972, 1973, 1976
Benson & Hedges Cup 1973, 1976
Gillette Cup 1974

International career:
Tests for England 28
One-day internationals 12

COUNTY LEGEND: Mike Denness was recognised as Kent's star during 70s

"He was a free-scoring player and a captain who was very strong.

"He had strong views and stuck with them; a fantastic ambassador for the game. Mike lead Kent to all those victories in the 70s, and he showed great character in many games.

"He was a dear friend of mine. We had many enjoyable games of golf together and sorted out the problems of the world together. He wasn't just a cricketing friend, he was a social friend."

His successor as Kent's chairman of cricket, and former team-mate Graham Johnson, said: "It is impossible to talk about Kent's successful side of the 1970s without mentioning Mike in the same breath.

"It was a family club back then and Mike was largely responsible for that.

"Our children grew up together in and around the ground, the families all socialised together and, because Mike lived so near to the St Lawrence Ground, he'd often host barbeques at his house for the entire team.

"It was a fun time to be playing for the county.

"All of that helped to create strong bonds which followed us onto the field. There was an atmosphere about the place and an aura about us as a side. We forged friendships that tied us together as cricketers and as mates for life, and Mike played a huge part in it.

"It was the very essence of what enjoying sport and playing for each other is really all about."

Another Kent legend, wicketkeeper Alan Knott, added: "What an example as a captain Mike was. He was always great entertainment for the public and his fellow players.

"In all those big one-day games in the 1970s, when the pressure was really on, Mike never panicked. He was the real 'Mr Cool' of Kent cricket."

Former Kent captain and Pakistan all-rouder, Asif Iqbal, added: "When I came from Pakistan to join Kent, Mike was one of the very few cricketers who made me feel so very comfortable and very much at home. He gave me advice, talked to me endlessly about the game and helped me to adapt to the English conditions."

He left Kent for Essex in 1977, where he won another three trophies before retiring in 1980; coaching their second XI from 1981 to 1984.

He then worked outside of the game in finance and insurance, public relations and, for several years, as an international match referee for the game's international governing body the ICC.

He is survived by his partner Doreen. A marriage to Molly ended in divorce. They had a son and two daughters.

KENT REMEMBERED

Charge of the Light Brigade captain honoured in bronze

By Nick Ames
nick.ames@archant.co.uk

A STATUE to the soldier whose garbled message led to the famous Charge of the Light Brigade has been unveiled outside the former Maidstone church at which he worshipped.

Captain Louis Nolan, of the 15th Royal King's Hussars, died in the Crimean War action which has been immortalised on film and in verse and song.

The charge, recounted by poet Lord Tennyson, is one of the most famous incidents in military history and formed part of the Battle of Balaclava, which took place on October 25, 1854.

But it was actually a colossal mistake which led to the massive casualties. In the space of just 20 minutes, of the 673 troops who took part, 118 were killed outright, 127 wounded and 58 went missing or were captured.

The charge was initiated when Army commander Lord Raglan saw Russian troops advancing on some abandoned British guns and decided to act to stop their capture.

He sent Nolan with the following message to cavalry commander Lord Lucan.

It read: "Lord Raglan wishes the cavalry to advance rapidly to the front and try to prevent the enemy carrying away the guns... Immediate."

However, also in the valley was a heavily armed Cossack gun battery with regiments of cavalry drawn up behind it.

For reasons unknown, when Lucan asked Capt Nolan what guns the message referred to he indicated, with a sweeping gesture, that formation.

Lucan ordered the Light Brigade forward and Capt Nolan specifically asked to join the attack, which was led by Major General James Brudenell, Earl of Cardigan.

MEMORIAL: Deputy Mayor of Maidstone Clive English at the statue of Captain Louis Nolan

Nolan died early in the charge which eventually reached the Russian guns and wreaked havoc, with lances and sabres spearing and slashing the fleeing Russians to the ground. The Lancers, Hussars and Light Dragoons then chased the Cossack cavalry down the valley despite being outnumbered five-to-one.

Realising they had gone too far and under heavy attack, they were forced to retreat, during which collosal casualties were suffered.

Historians have long argued as to who was responsible. Some put the blame on Capt Nolan saying he misunderstood the order and pointed to the wrong guns, others blame Raglan for the vagueness of his instructions, while Lucan has been faulted for not seeking clarification of what his commanding officer meant.

The charge has been recreated on film twice, in 1936 with Errol Flynn starring in a very fanciful retelling, and in 1968, where a more factual account has David Hemmings as a glory-hunting Capt Nolan.

Tennyson's verse, published just six weeks after the event, including the lines "All in the Valley of Death, Rode the six hundred", made the action famous and Rudyard Kipling lamented the fate of the wounded survivors in The Last of the Light Brigade.

It is believed that just before a shell splinter smashed into Capt Nolan's chest, the officer realised his instructions had been misinterpreted and that the cavalry were riding into the mouths of the massed Russian cannon – and he was trying to halt the charge.

Capt Nolan was riding master at the Maidstone Cavalry Depot from 1851 until 1854 when he left for the Crimea.

After his death, a memorial plaque was installed in Holy Trinity Church, but it was removed when the building was converted into sheltered accommodation.

A copy is now part of the panels on the memorial, made of Kentish ragstone with a bronze resin sculpture of the mounted Capt Nolan.

Stone mason Gordon Newton of East Farleigh and Meltdowns Art Studio of Ramsgate collaborated on the Maidstone Borough Council project.

Capt Nolan had the reputation for being an outstanding officer during his service, which consisted of postings in Madras and Bangalore, India.

But according to his biographer Hubert Moyse-Bartlett: "In so far as Louis had an English home, it was at Maidstone."

He wrote two books on tactics for mounted troops before he set off to the war in Russia, which saw an alliance of Britain, France and the Ottoman (Turkish) Empire fighting the empire ruled over by the Tsar.

OPINION

Voters need to be inspired

Academic Peter Abbotts examines the issues surrounding low voter turnout in local elections and what's needed to remove the apathy

THE elections to Kent County Council, one of the biggest council in the UK, take place on Thursday. But do they matter?

A recent Hansard Society study described the electorate as 'disgruntled, disillusioned, and disengaged'.

Certainly, low turnout has been a factor in recent elections throughout the UK.

Last year, for example, Kent's Police and Crime Commissioner Ann Barnes was elected from just 16 per cent of people voting.

In the last county elections in 2009, turnout was some 37 per cent, though this was inflated by the European elections being held on the same day. So too the county elections of May 2005, which coincided with the General Election.

Yet, in comparison, the General Election figures show a consistent 60 per cent of people making their voice heard.

Isn't there a problem with voting at the local level? The Hansard Society suggests only 38 per cent of people want to play a part in local decision making. Yet it doesn't seem to stand up to scrutiny that only 38 per cent of people are concerned with how Kent spends £1.2 billion pounds of your money on, for example, education and social care.

The problem is with the political system. There is a democratic deficit here which explains why so many people aren't voting.

First thoughts are with Kent's Conservative majority. Why would a Labour voter in Kent bother to turn out?

Labour won just 2.4 per cent of the seats across Kent. The news was scarcely better if that voter happens to support the Liberal Democrats as they took 8.3 per cent of the seats in the last countywide poll in 2009.

It is hard, is it not, to justify such voter behaviour when the Conservatives win some 88.1 per cent of the seats?

Debates about the merits of the electoral system can, and have been, offered elsewhere culminating ironically in a disappointing turnout in the referendum on the voting system.

Some further observations are relevant.

- There has undoubtedly been a progressive decline in the number of people who identify with one party or the other.
- So too has there been diminishing numbers of younger voters in elections.
- All political parties are disadvantaged by dwindling membership, resulting in far fewer leaflets and less canvassing of the public.
- In county elections, independents lack the membership of a local party base.
- Voter turnout is lower when expecting a landslide.
- People don't adequately understand – or politicians don't explain – the issues.
- Local government lacks power.
- Dislike of politicians and their expenses.
- Absence of any new ideas to tackle the things we see every day.

There is a democratic deficit which explains why so many people aren't voting

As to the future, Labour has, only this week, mooted plans for a national bank holiday for polling day and entering voters into a prize lottery reinforced by social media.

Gimmicks of this kind mask the real debate. It's quite simple. Voters will turn out to vote when they know that local government has real political and fiscal power, that it is accountable and transparent and not a one-party state propped up by the electoral system.

The jury is out on each of these measures.

Peter Abbotts is head of the department of applied social sciences at Canterbury Christ Church University.

KOS COMMENT

Don't send out message our county is just rubbish

NOT many are lucky enough to call where they live the Garden of England, yet there are still some ignorant to the part they must play in ensuring it remains a county to be proud of; who don't think twice about dropping litter on the floor or dumping rubbish on our streets.

While there's a lot of finger pointing at authorities to clean up mess, it's about time people take some personal responsibility. Yes, sometimes rubbish will fall off a lorry, or blow out of a bin – but much of what we see is just laziness. This attitude needs to change, if not for the sake of the environment, then for the pride of our county. Do we want visitors to spread the word that Kent's streets are covered in rubbish?

Don't miss chance to vote

IT'S easy to think your vote in the council elections will make little difference, that nothing will change.

But this is a chance to have a say and ensure democracy is served.

These elections count and will have a very real impact on your daily life. Do not miss the chance to make your voice heard.

Rubbish start to county visit

ON a recent trip to Ashford I was appalled by the amount of rubbish along the motorway between Ashford and Dover.

It is not a good advert for the Garden of England.

I appreciate that councils have to watch their budgets but surely people who are receiving unemployment money could be encouraged to help clean up the place?

At least it might deter others from throwing their rubbish onto the side of the motorway.

Bryan Ledger, Germany

Clean up road during daylight

MY hope in writing is that you could possibly highlight the appalling litter problem on Canterbury City Council's section of the A2.

I have tried over a number of years to have this part of the road cleaned properly, but to no avail. It is cleaned, and is due to be cleaned soon. But, just like before, a good job will not be done, and the reason for this is quite simple; they undertake it at night.

I am aware of all the reasons they give for not cleaning a fast moving road during the day, and not excluding cost, but it needs to be done properly, and this means during the day.

Before the grass and weeds spring up to hide this blight for another season, I would like someone to ride this road from Canterbury to Dover by bus and then tell me and thousands of other appalled people that it's perfectly acceptable.

Kenneth Read, by email

Is he driven to oppose it all?

IF it is true, as Mr Hudson suggests it is, that some organisations representing the interests of those visually and aurally impaired are opposed to shared space schemes, then I would agree with him and not take issue any further about them.

I would also say that if a similar scheme was proposed for Tenterden, it being basically a 'one street town', I would agree again that it is probably a very bad idea.

Where I cannot agree with him (as I made clear in a previous letter) is his 'blanket opposition' to 20mph speed schemes. If there is compelling evidence that they are justified at particular locations, then 'opposing for opposing sake' to preserve the status quo, is a redundant position.

I have also challenged him in the past when he appears to be speaking for all drivers and in doing so displays such a negative attitude to every other road user. He now seeks to justify his views by claiming they are not far from his contemporaries because he 'judges people by their actions rather than their words'.

How he would go about proving such a nebulous statement is a matter for conjecture. Perhaps by the number of drivers he's observed breaking the traffic laws? If that is the case, then it's a pretty poor foundation on which to base a campaign of opposition to every proposed traffic measure.

That said, I hope that is not the basis of his campaigning stance because I believe I can finish with an issue on which we would probably agree – the proposal to extend the bus lane in Sutton Road, Maidstone.

Who came up with this idea and why does the council seem to be 'buying into' it? It's a ludicrous proposal that will extend the congestion even further than the speed camera at Longfield (where it commonly backs up to now) to possibly back as far as the police HQ and even Morrisons.

I put forward this counter proposal: Get rid of the useless bit of bus lane, which serves only to prevent those who wish to travel straight on and even turn left into Loose Road from accessing the nearside lane until they're practically at the Wheatsheaf junction.

Get rid of it and move the bus stops on both sides away from the junction and create a 'bus box' at each new location. Drivers would then have more road space to move out and pass stationary buses and get back into the nearside lane before reaching the junction.

Christopher Hudson-Gool. Maidstone

Please vote for change

THE 'hidden message of the election' [KoS opinion, last week by Prof Richard G Whitman] is the apathy the 'Buggins turn' Labour and Tory governments have created while ignoring voters over the invasion of Iraq, the EU, immigration and just about everything else.

They both assume 'democracy' means arrogantly taking power, telling us what we want and ruining the country by changing everything to suit their dogma.

We need a sea change in how people vote and it's essential they vote for what is good for this country. The usual tactical voting, for the same tired old parties that have lost the plot and what they used to stand for, will just give us more of the same.

Phil Granger, West Malling

Thatcher was right for time

WITH reference to Gary Cox's remarks (Letters 14/04/13) about Margaret Thatcher's death and her leadership days, I would like to add my perspective.

When I first came to Kent in the 60s, I moved from having a job in London, a place I hated, to come to Deal for the sea fishing. I found work hard to find, and tried everywhere including down the pits, without success.

I had many friends who were miners and know the hardships they suffered, but they were used as pawns by Arthur Scargill and his cronies with their political ambitions.

I believe this country can produce the right person at the right time - Churchill for one - and Margaret Thatcher was that person, at that time, who broke the powers of the communist unions and rejuvenated the nation.

When there is war, it's the troops who make the sacrifices. Thatcher's comment about "the enemy within" was directed towards 'King Arthur' and his communist cronies, not the working miners.

Frank Davies, Dover.

Chef swaps her jungle cooking pot for kitchen on the parade

Rosemary and time, with a liberal dash of enthusiasm, are all you need when you sign up to cookery school

By GREG MILES

CELEBRITY chef Rosemary Shrager is hoping to inspire a new generation of talented cooks at her cookery school, which is opening in Tunbridge Wells this week.

The 61-year-old has relocated from the north to The Pantiles in a new project with Rosemary Shrager's Cookery School, mixing domestic basics with professional-standard training and a deli counter at the Corn Exchange in The Lower Pantiles.

The former host of TV show Ladette To Lady has enjoyed a number of years in the limelight with five books, 10 years of running the Swinton Park Cookery School in Yorkshire and, more recently, turning kangaroo tail into a tasty treat as a contestant on the reality TV show I'm A Celebrity...Get Me Out Of Here!.

'The trend is to go local, try to go for the basics, and do things yourself'

It has been a busy time since she left the jungle last autumn, but the change of scenery in The Pantiles, where she is teaming up with executive chef John Wilson, is matching up to her expectations ahead of opening up for her half-day and full-day courses.

"I've left the north and come south, and I love it. I'm sleeping and working and sleeping and working. It's unbelievable," she said.

"I came down because I was shown this place and I thought 'Wow!'. I love the location, I love The Pantiles. I feel my personality is big enough to cope with this huge place and I thought it would work. It's been lovely.

"I've got some friends who live in Penshurst, so I have come down to stay periodically and I've got to know Tunbridge Wells. I've not lived here, but it's a lovely place to be. It's gorgeous."

She is hoping to make the most of what Kent has to offer in terms of produce and keep with the current trend of going local.

"There are loads of farms and wonderful growing, apples and wines. That's why we're putting on Kentish wine and food evenings. We're doing chef's tables for Kentish food. It's terribly important to support your local food.

"It's important being involved with local people and using local produce.

"The trend is to go local, try to go for the basics and do things yourself. The thing is to learn how to prepare and make things go further. It's about going back to the old traditions. Going back to the traditions of making jams, like our grandmothers used to do. There's a huge trend where you're using every part of the animal."

With the basics in mind, Shrager hopes to inspire people of all abilities while fast-tracking youngsters in apprenticeships.

"I want people to go home with good techniques and develop a passion for cooking," she said. "I feel very strongly about cooking, but you should never patronise someone.

"I don't care what people ask me, be it about how to poach an egg or how to peel an orange. I love cooking all the time. It's not hard to do something different, it's about being brave. For me, it's such an easy thing. I think it's about giving people the inspiration.

"I'm really hoping to take proper apprenticeships – 16- to 19-year-olds who want to cook. And I've got another side where I'm taking people who want to learn privately."

One moment she did not enjoy cooking quite as much as she might was back in the Australian jungle in the ITV series, with the likes of former heavyweight champion of the world David Haye to feed.

"Going into the jungle was a lot harder than I had ever imagined," she said. "We had to tackle boredom as we had nothing to do all day. My priority was to keep my dignity, to keep it together.

"When you're in there, you can't be anything other than yourself. My gameplan was to listen to people for once, but it lasted for five seconds flat. I was so nervous and said all the wrong things about boxing. But David and I are good friends now.

"The thing was, when I got in there, it annoyed me they couldn't cook the beans. They were eating raw beans. I tried to help and they didn't like being told. I made the decision I wasn't going to cook, so I sat behind my trunk. That's why I came across as bossy.

'I don't care what people ask me, be it how to poach an egg or how to peel an orange'

"Because you're so hungry, the food is desperate – there was no time to cook anything worthwhile, although I gave it a go. Even though they were really hungry, they were quite fussy."

Shrager insists she is not as bossy as she may have come across in the jungle, preferring instead a fun approach to her courses.

"I'm not like that at all. I'm not bossy," she said. "I want people to learn. I just want people to have fun and enjoy themselves – I hope I didn't come across too bossy."

So what tips does she have for making the most of simple recipes?

"Learning to cook a duck breast is really important," she said. "And the long, slow cooking is really exciting, like a belly of pork and pressing it. Coming up with your own bacon and curing it with maple syrup – just things like that that you can do yourself.

"Curing is a great thing to do. Curing a whole chicken overnight with honey and lemon... oh my giddy aunt, it's absolutely delicious!"

Celebrate the sounds of the 60s with a trip down Carnaby Street

greg.miles@archant.co.uk

THE sights and sounds of the 60s are coming to Tunbridge Wells in a stage show set in London's ever-colourful Carnaby Street.

It has taken music mogul Carl Leighton-Pope, who lists Michael Bublé and Bryan Adams among his clients, 16 years to get the story of his teenage years to the stage, and it comes to the Assembly Hall Theatre next month.

As an impressionable mod, he hung out with the likes of The Who, whose music, along with that of The Beatles, Manfred Mann, The Animals and The Searchers, features in the show, which is directed by Bob Thomson, of Blood Brothers fame.

Leighton-Pope, who has also been a consultant to the Harlem Globetrotters for a tour of North America, said he had been surprised by the reaction to the show, which started at London's Hackney Empire at the beginning of this month.

"People just got up and danced around the theatre – they weren't even drunk by then," he said. "I'm gobsmacked at the response we have got. It's just been so good."

The story follows the life of a teenager from Liverpool and his arrival in the capital with just his guitar for company, and the highs and lows that follow. It is not too dissimilar to the life Leighton-Pope led himself.

"In 1964 I was a mod and I was 18 years old," he said. "Whatever music you liked clearly defined who you were, what clothes you wore, the girls you went out with. Everything came from the music.

"I was an out-of-work actor and at the weekends I worked at the Marquee Club on the corner of Wardour Street. The Who played there; The Yardbirds with Eric Clapton were the resident band. And on the Saturday everyone went to Carnaby Street – that's where we were.

"At the end of the 1950s, the youth of the era looked at their parents and thought we want to be different. We came out with our pointed shoes on and tight jeans – we were a different era of people.

"The great thing about Carnaby Street from 1962 to 1968 was that it was the place to go. You could walk down it and there would be a Mini parked up and it would be Paul McCartney shopping – you would just bump into all these guys."

Carnaby Street The Musical plays at the Assembly Hall Theatre from Tuesday to Saturday, May 14-18.

There are 7.30pm shows each night, with matinees on Wednesday and Saturday at 2.30pm. Tickets are priced from £19.50-£27.50. Visit www.assemblyhalltheatre.co.uk or phone 01892 530613/532072.

Tommy Cooper tribute tour brings comedy legend to life

THE life of fez-wearing comic Tommy Cooper is set to be unveiled in a stage show coming to Margate.

Damian Williams will be starring in Being Tommy Cooper, a new play by Tom Green coming to the Theatre Royal early next month.

The show, which is on a 39-date tour of the UK, explores the life of the comedian, who passed away in 1984 after collapsing from a heart attack live on television.

Cooper captivated his audiences with his calamitous routines, but there was a darker side, which is shown in the performance, revealing the pressures and loneliness that he experienced.

After his television debut on the BBC in 1948, Cooper went on to star in many variety shows in a career that spanned four decades, most notably on London Weekend Television from 1968-72 and on Thames Television from 1973-80.

By the mid-70s he was one of the most successful and recognisable comedians in the world.

The show is on Tuesday, May 7, at 7.30pm. Tickets cost £16, £14 for concessions and £12 for Friends. Restricted-view seats are £10; to book, phone the box office on 01843 292795/296111.

Charleston Chasers... hot as ever

THE Charleston Chasers, billed as the "most authentic and most entertaining group performing hot vintage popular music", are coming to Ramsgate's Granville Theatre next month.

The 10-strong band have just celebrated their 25th anniversary, touring the UK with their renditions of hits from the Art Deco era of the 1920s and 30s. See www.charlestonchasers.com to find out more.

Tickets for the concert, on Saturday, May 4, at 7.30pm, are priced at £16 (£15 Friends Of Granville Theatre, under-16s and seniors). To book, phone the box office on 01843 591750.

It's Hevy but it ain't at Port Lympne

THE Hevy Festival will not be taking place at Port Lympne Wild Animal Park this year.

Tickets have already gone on sale for the three-day punk and metal festival in August, but the park has issued a statement confirming that no contract has been signed for it to take place at its 600-acre site.

The festival has been at Port Lympne for the last three years, but the park said no agreement was reached after talks at the end of last year.

The festival's website, www.hevy.co.uk, states that it will be held from Friday to Sunday, August 2-4. Organisers have reported that it will still be going ahead this year, but the new venue cannot yet be revealed.

This year's line-up features 80 bands and will be headlined by Killswitch Engage and Black Flag.

Seeds at the Hop Farm

THE Lightning Seeds will be playing this year's Hop Farm Music Festival.

The Liverpool band were formed more than 20 years ago as "the perfect pop project" and recorded a string of hits including Pure, The Life Of Riley and, of course, England's World Cup anthem Three Lions.

They have just been announced as joining the festival line-up, which includes such big-name acts as My Bloody Valentine and Rodriguez.

The festival will be held on Friday and Saturday, July 5-6. Visit www.hopfarmfestival.com for further details.

Model day out for families

greg.miles@archant.co.uk

A FAMILY day out showcasing the best in model planes, cars, trucks, boats and tanks is landing at Headcorn aerodrome in September.

The Second World War airbase will be hosting the Southern Model Show for the first time, the event having been relocated and rebranded.

It started out as an afternoon club on a school field, having been organised by the Croydon Airport Model Flying Club many years ago, and grew to become the premier model show in the south of England. However, last year it became too big for the club's 80 members to manage and was cancelled.

The show has now been taken over by Heritage Special Events, which hopes to attract some 12,000 spectators and participants over the weekend of September 14-15.

Colin Hitchins, of Heritage Events, said: "Heritage Events are working with some of the best in the world of modelling, and the Southern Model Show now has a new home here in the heart of Kent.

"Taking advantage of the superb facilities at Headcorn aerodrome, I am sure the event will prosper and grow and be a magnet for model-makers from across the UK and beyond."

The show will bring with it a diverse range of models, from Daleks to cars and watercraft.

Doors open at 10am on both days and one-day tickets are priced at £10 for adults, £8 for children and £30 for a family of two adults and two children.

Two-day tickets are available for £14 for children, £18 for an adults and £52 for a family. Overnight camping is available at the site from £8 per night.

See www.heritage-events.co.uk for details.

Apache will cast its shadows at airshow

AN Apache attack helicopter will be a star turn at this year's South East Airshow.

It is the first time that the fearsome craft will be making an appearance at the event, which this year is being held at Manston airport, near Ramsgate, on Saturday, June 22.

Designed to hunt and destroy tanks, the 2001 Apache can operate in all weathers, day or night, and finds potential targets in seconds.

The attack helicopter display team will perform hovers, twists, turns, wingovers and flypasts and give a glimpse of its Hellfire missiles, rockets and a 30mm chain gun.

Organiser Chris Yates said: "Helicopters are incredible, so we are delighted to confirm we are one of only five shows the attack helicopter display team will be at with the Apache."

Tickets are priced at £12 for adults, £9 for children and senior citizens, £35 for a family of two adults and two children and £30 for a single-parent family of one adult and up to three children – online booking is available only up to 6pm on Tuesday, June 18.

Get up close and personal with Triennial art on tours

greg.miles@archant.co.uk

FOLKESTONE'S Triennial art collection is to be celebrated next month during a weekend of tours and workshops.

The collection of 16 pieces, by artists including Tracey Emin and Mark Wallinger, has been renamed Folkestone Artworks. It was commissioned by the town's Creative Foundation for the triennials of 2008 and 2011.

In time for the bank-holiday weekend of Saturday to Monday, May 4-6, the Creative Foundation is producing a guide map, audio tour and website to encourage the public to re-engage with the works.

The chief executive of the Creative Foundation, Alastair Upton, said: "We want to encourage the people of Folkestone and its visitors to download or pick up a map to explore, experience and discover this gem of a collection.

"Experiencing this new way of looking at art outside the confines of a gallery encourages different ways of seeing, learning and thinking about contemporary art."

On the Saturday, there are two guided tours. At 11am a special guest will take a two-hour tour starting at Quarterhouse, while at 1pm the Pavement Pounders CIC group will lead a walk. The latter will also do a second tour the following day (Sunday) at 11am.

VISUAL: Works are scattered around Folkestone

At 2pm on the Saturday there is a cultural dog walk and dog party, which starts at the Folkestone Mermaid at Sunny Sands. It then journeys through Pleydell Gardens, with the party taking place at Pae White's Barking Rocks.

On the Sunday, there is a children's tour and creative workshop for under-12s run by theatre company Scandalmongers. Then, on Monday, there is a bike ride starting at 11am from The Hub in Sandgate and making its way to Folkestone harbour. Finally, at 2pm, there is a family fun event run by Scandalmongers.

To book the guided tours and workshops, phone Quarterhouse on 01303 858500. Visit www.folkestoneartworks.org.uk for details.

Concert entertainment fit for a king

greg.miles@archant.co.uk

VIP packages are now available for Leeds Castle's open-air classical concert in the summer.

The Royal Philharmonic Orchestra and the Military Wives are set to perform at the castle on Saturday, July 13, and you can enjoy the show in style, with a number of packages on offer.

With the VIP package you can check into either your castle or stable-courtyard bedroom before enjoying drinks and canapes in the library and drawing rooms. You can then enjoy a guided tour of the castle with a steward.

A two-course dinner, which includes half a bottle of wine per person, is then served in the banqueting hall. After lunch there is time to relax with coffee to the sound of the piano in the drawing rooms.

The start of the concert is announced by the firing of cannons on the castle island, accompanied by the serving of Champagne.

The special treatment does not stop there, though, as during the concert you will receive a hamper of wine, desserts and cheeses. Tea and coffee will be provided during the interval.

Following the fireworks finale, hot supper and hot toddies will be served in the library and drawing rooms.

Residential guests will get a full English breakfast the following morning.

Prices start at £285 per person to depart at midnight or from £390 per person including a stable-courtyard bedroom or £450 including a castle bedroom.

For more details, phone 01622 765400.

Capital photography exhibition supports county deaf charity

A PHOTOGRAPHER from the county town is supporting a deaf charity with a preview night for his latest exhibition.

London: Night & Day, by Matt White, opens with the charity preview and an auction in aid of Hi Kent on Wednesday, May 1.

The exhibition focuses on architectural landscapes using sunrise, sunset and the reflective properties of the Thames.

Matt, who lives in Maidstone, said: "Hopefully, these shots give a feel of central London, its beauty and colour at all times of the day, whether it's 4am on a deserted South Bank or in the middle of a demonstration in the City.

"To be able to support Hi Kent with an auction of art by members of Making Art Work and Stepping Stones is a bonus as it is something that affects me personally."

The exhibition will be at Stepping Stones Studios in Museum Avenue, Maidstone, until the end of May.

Free tickets to the preview can be booked by phoning Hi Kent on 01622 691151 or Matt on 07990 782298, or in person at Stepping Stone Studios.

A bright new venue for all you budding thirty-somethings

RESTAURANT REVIEW

FOLKESTONE has had its fair share of criticism in recent years, mainly from those who live there and many in the 25-plus age range, who say there is little to offer in the way of bars and restaurants.

The heady days of La Parisienne, now Club Onyx, are well behind those hitting the 30 mark, and while there are a few bars for those who prefer to steer clear of drinking alcopops and dancing on a sticky dance floor, to be honest, there's not really that much to offer.

In terms of restaurants, while Rocksalt is undeniably lovely, most don't have the bank balance to become regularly acquainted with it. Others, meanwhile, are too far out, meaning that visitors miss out on areas such as the charming harbour and Creative Quarter.

Whisperings throughout March, however, hinted at a new kid on the block – a contemporary Mediterranean restaurant called Blooms @ the 1/4. Located at the bottom of The Old High Street, it boasts a smart exterior, floor-to-ceiling windows and an outside seating area.

Attentive waiting staff, with good knowledge of the wine and food, work alongside a team in the theatre-style kitchen, while the spacious, smartly-decorated interior – and a menu packed with seafood, meat, pizza and pasta – show that the owners clearly mean – and want – business.

My guest chose ramiro peppers with haloumi cheese to start and I went for the seafood cocktail. We selected a bottle of white wine to share.

The prawns, which came in their shells, could have done with more flavour and seasoning, but the delicious chilli mayonnaise made up for that. The peppers were perfectly cooked and tasty but again lacked seasoning. Both were beautifully presented – a theme throughout the meal.

For the main, I chose creamy Gorgonzola rigatoni – a bowl of rich, creamy pasta topped with peppery rocket that delivered everything it promised. My guest selected the Blooms burger. This was not your Average Joe burger but a delicious piece of meat with a home-made roll, Mozzarella and salsa so delicious that I ate half of it!

The atmosphere had been wonderful, the staff were friendly and there was an exciting feel about the place.

The dessert, unfortunately, was a let-down. While my Eton raspberry mess was presented superbly, it lacked real punch. The meringue on the top was tasty, but once that layer had been eaten all that was left was a bowlful of seemingly never-ending, rather bland, cream.

After a creamy main course, I just couldn't manage it and even trying to scrape the raspberry coolie, placed artistically on the side of the plate, on to the cream didn't help.

Despite the meal finishing on a bit of a low, the restaurant was lovely and the meal tasty (our total bill was £64), if lacking seasoning. Any new business has teething problems and in this case I'll happily take a gamble and say this restaurant is destined for a bright future.

St George's tribute ale will put fire in your jar

TO celebrate St George's Day, Faversham brewery Shepherd Neame has launched its Dragonfire Ale.

The brew, described as "full bodied and rich with a mellow mahogany hue", will only be available for a short time as a tribute to England's patron saint.

Bitter in taste, Dragonfire will be at 4.5 per cent strength both from cask and bottles, which are on sale in Shepherd Neame pubs around the county.

If you want the taste, be quick as stocks are expected to run out before the end of the month as the brew is a one-off and won't be brewed after this weekend.

Eco-cheese dreams become a reality

THE UK's first carbon-neutral cheese delivery was completed last week by Winterdale.

The Wrotham business has become well known for creating cheeses using only natural resources, including solar-power heating and under-soil cold-cellars for storage.

Eco-fans saw the launch of the first-ever delivery as owner Robin Betts set off from his farm to deliver to a number of restaurants in London using an electric and solar-powered car.

He said: "We've been working tirelessly towards a greener future for the company. We believe our cheese demonstrates how you can can eat great-tasting but sustainble food."

Homes & Gardens

Don't rush to put tender plants into the ground when it's cold

GARDENING WITH THE EXPERT
JEREMY SHIRLEY

PROVERB of the month: 'A swarm of bees in May ensures a wagon full of hay'. Don't we need both?

Yes, we need the bees and, much to my surprise, these little winged gardeners that give us honey as well as invaluable pollination have survived well through the vicious winter.

Talking of which, only shortly after my previous article, we saw another couple of centimetres of snow here, on April 5.

I had cause to go into a large garden centre to buy an aerator for my tropical-fish aquarium as my old pump had died.

What did I see? Young potted fuchsias and geraniums (pelargonium) on sale to plant in the garden. Quite disgraceful.

On BBC's Gardeners' World on April 12, Monty Don wisely gave words of caution not to plant out tender plants yet. Pot them on and keep them in the greenhouse.

IN A BUZZ: Bees should be considered welcome pollinators of flowers and food in any garden

The garden-centre trade was furious and in The Sunday Times of April 14 vented its anger about the harm that this item had caused it.

But Monty's advice could not be faulted. This proves what I've said: some garden centres seem not to care a damn. You should instead give moral support to your genuine local nursery.

Now, with longer and sunnier days, nature is at long last slowly waking up. But, echoing the words of Monty, you must still exercise caution with tender plants.

Fuchsias are my wife's speciality – do not plant them out until after May 21 as frosts are still lurking to catch out the unexpected.

The effect of frost has a peculiar habit, since you can have a problem in one part of your garden while another area can remain untouched.

A handy tip I learnt in my early days of market gardening was that if a crop had been frosted before sunrise but irrigation was implemented to wash it off, usually the crop could be saved.

If, however, the plants were left to have the sun on them, they would be doomed.

Earlier this month, Radio 4 issued a warning to gardeners about the massive build-up of slugs following the incessant rain last summer and autumn – so what's the answer?

Avoid slug pellets outside at all costs as they are frequently taken by birds and even cats and dogs. Few people know that a mulch of rotted oak leaves, coffee grounds and even broken-open tea-bags spread around those plants now emerging from winter slumbers, such as hostas, delphiniums and rows of seedlings, can be protected by such a method or by watering an infusion of these leaves into the soil.

Sow little and often

As for us at Victoriana, we invented a product called Banish that, when watered into the soil, can keep these perishers away, while slugs' eggs below ground will disappear.

Tomato-planting time is now upon us and our trials in summer, including tasting, have found much interest. We grow in our own organic compost to ensure the highest lycopene content and flavour, as found in soil-grown tomatoes in the 1940s and 50s.

Did you see the Channel 5 TV programme Horse Meat And Other Food Shocks, in which it was claimed that today you would have to eat 10 tomatoes to obtain the same nutritional value as one tomato from the 1940s?

It was also claimed that salad leaves went through a chlorine treatment stronger than that in a public swimming pool.

One tomato I discovered from America in 1973 is called Pixie, a compact bush variety that can be grown in a two-litre pot on a windowsill – delicious fruit around the size of a golfball.

Pixie can be easily propagated from side-shoot cuttings to crop all year round. And, yes, I've had Pixie fruits at Christmas.

The vegetable garden now really comes into its right own and I advise sowing little and often to avoid a glut.

I think it's daft to sow too much, as one does see on allotments rows of runner beans 20 feet long. No average family can consume so much – avoid waste. The long season is around two months and Victorian climbing peas are a must.

A tip that I must give when the flowers emerge is to spray with a natural insect repellent – this will avoid the annoyance and waste of maggoty peas.

Later, in May and early June, is the time for planting sweetcorn. Lark is a fairly recent introduction and both tender and sweet, while Seville is a variety that can stand a lower growing temperature and is a good selection with which to follow up.

Climbing French beans are always prolific croppers and many old folk will recall Smedleys at Faversham, which used to process Blue Lake, grown in Kent.

Globe artichokes and cardoons planted now should be cropping late summer and are, of course, perennial.

Practise a later sowing of broad beans such as Sutton. Steamed and served cold in salads imparts a better flavour – but remember to pick 'em young.

Since commencing this, I have just cut the first asparagus from our unheated nursery polytunnel. Connovers Colossal, Jersey Knight and Mary Washington are excellent.

Douce Provence peas are in flower and carrots sown in December 2012 are now 10cm tall despite the great freeze and no heat. It is amazing how the solar warmth even on those dull, sunless days advances the season.

Potted fruit trees, bush fruits, bramble and cane fruits and nuts can still be planted now and through the summer months, along with grape vines.

Why not give sea kale a go? This was once a very popular vegetable. So much has been lost from cultivation, including the everlasting cauliflowers.

Delicious tumbleberries – a cultivated alpine strawberry still found in French and Scandinavian markets – are superb for jam-making, as they remain whole when cooked, unlike ordinary strawberries that go to mush.

In 1953 I found in Elmshorn, Germany, a most interesting strawberry trained up poles – to this day I consider it the finest-flavoured strawberry of all.

Sometimes I train on a trellis to enjoy fruit free from slugs. It is not grown commercially as it has no long-term storage life – it needs to be picked fresh and eaten within a couple of days.

Moving on, Old Spice and Spencer sweet peas may be sown and planted now – grooming by support will reward you with the stardom of this once so very popular cut flower.

Perhaps I inherited my father's interest because I still grow the varieties he favoured, such as Winston Churchill and Air Warden, both of which are still available in a good Spencer mix.

My son, Stephen, has made a good clearance for a display of pretty plants that we shall be setting out later this month based on both annual and perennial favourites, many from a time gone by.

You will also find a large carpet of plants for bees and lovely butterflies that I named after my seven-year-old granddaughter as Milly's Bee Mix.

I am offering £25 worth of stock for the first person to tell me who wrote: "Gardening is such an interesting colourful occupation; to many it becomes a delightful hobby and a happy form of recreation; whilst to others it is never much more than a back-breaking ordeal but I believe we all, deep in our hearts, have a love of flowers and trees and nature's handiwork; it is a part of the English character."

Now, who wrote that?

Not a pretender, like the so-called presenters of gardening today. Oh yes, it was a while back before Fred Streeter's time – remember him?

Come the summer – it will come, you will see – and you can plant the sun-loving calypso magic from the Portulacaceae order of plants and the old-fashioned Morning Glory Ipomoea – remember those deep-purple ones of the 1940s? Older folk will.

to ensure you have a continuous food crop

I am often asked what to plant in shady places. What better than old-fashioned foxgloves, which should have a modicum of sunlight?

After flowering and having let their seeds drop, only then cut them down.

I know gloves can be a bit of a nuisance, but you must wear them – latex ones are fine, cheap and disposable. A woman died cutting down foxgloves or Digitalis, having absorbed through her skin that which, while used synthetically in heart medicine, can in excess be harmful – but do not be put off from growing them.

Add some sweet-perfumed violets, a few Victorian everlasting polyanthus and a scattering of bluebell seeds. There you are – a mini woodland retreat.

Soon many people will be suffering from hay fever – a nightmare for me for more than 40 years... streaming eyes, itchy mouth and throat and sneezing, until I discovered feverfew.

Naturina is rich in antihistamine – the leaves of this bitter-tasting herb taken all the year round at breakfast prevent hay fever and give relief to those with joint pains and arthritis.

I've had much praise from elderly ladies who have had relief from swollen, painful joints, being able to remove rings from swollen hands and knit again.

Another amazing herb is Aloe vera barbadensis, which can relieve symptoms of eczema, ulcers, burns and stings. It rebuilds damaged skin tissue. Do not confuse it with the seedling Aloes sold in many garden centres – ours can only be propagated from offsets. No home, kitchen or sunny windowsill in a workshop should be without one.

GOOD ENOUGH TO EAT: Peas are an excellent crop for the garden; opposite, tomatoes can be cultivated all year round with just a little care and attention

Stephen, Mark and Brian have recently planted a small orchard here and shortly our vegetable trial gardens will be under way. Late? Yes, due to the poor weather and excessive rainfall.

Like many, we are more than six weeks behind. Stephen is also setting out a mini vineyard and visitors will soon see the new grape arbour construction besides a carpet of colour.

Finally, my thanks to everyone who took up my March offer of a free selection of Granny's Favourites – little Molly's collection of cottage-garden seeds.

Pretty and pink, the radish doesn't need to remain humble

RADISHES are one of the most popular salad vegetables that can be grown in the garden, and they are in season from now until October.

They have been part of global cuisine for hundreds of years, making up dishes from French radish sandwiches to Mexican beef wraps with radish and avocado salsa.

Renowned for their peppery flavour and crisp texture, radishes are a versatile, fresh and tasty cooking ingredient, adding a kick to anything from salads to stir-fries, whatever the season. And, of course, they taste fantastic when simply dipped in salt.

They are a fast-growing crop, progressing from seed to eating plant in 25 days, making them the first UK field-grown salad vegetables to come into season, in April.

And at just five calories a serving, radishes are officially the lowest-calorie vegetables and also low in fat. Plus, they consist of 95 per cent water – making them a great way to help boost hydration levels.

Fiona Beckett, food and drink matching expert, said: "I've always loved radishes since I went to France as a kid. There's nothing more summery, whatever the weather, than a plate of fresh radishes, a pat of good butter and some freshly-baked bread.

"Recently, I've discovered they're much more versatile, that you can add them to salads or use them as a colourful topping for spreads. And – great for someone who's on a diet – that they're incredibly low in calories.

"When it comes to matching wine, I like to go for crisp and fruity – fresh-tasting unoaked whites and rosés and light, fruity reds. Light lagers, cider and fresh citrussy cocktails are great options, too.

"In France they'll often put a plate of radishes on the table with a carafe of local wine to sip and nibble as you decide what to eat. It's a nice thing to offer at home, too, before the meal kicks off."

Radishes have been cultivated for thousands of years, originating in China, then being grown in ancient Egypt and Greece before finding their way to England in the mid-16th century – and into Shakespeare's play, Henry IV, which includes the lines: "Like a man made after supper of a cheese-paring: when a' was naked, he was, for all the world, like a forked radish, with a head fantastically carved upon it with a knife."

RADISHES AROUND THE WORLD

Mexican beef wraps with radish and avocado salsa

Spanish colonists brought the radish to Mexico in the 16th century and it's been a popular ingredient in Mexican food ever since, providing a texture contrast and a fresh peppery flavour to many dishes.

Polish farmer's radish and soft-cheese sandwiches

This is a twist on Twarozek, a typical Polish dish popular in springtime; it is a combination of ricotta, sour cream, chives and radish spread on rye bread.

Indian spiced radishes and pumpkin stew

The radish is particularly popular in the north of India, where it grows abundantly, appearing in many different dishes such as sambar or vegetable stew and radish paranthas (Indian flatbreads). In this dish, the radishes are stir-fried with herbs and spices, while the sweet taste of the squash offers a contrast to the radishes' peppery bite.

Say hallo to the delightful stately home that could be yours for just £4.5 million

AS bed-and-breakfasts go, The Salutation in Sandwich comes in somewhere near the top of the scale.

The smallest amount you'll be shelling out for a room is £160, although you'll be able to sleep soundly in the knowledge that the sum does include breakfast.

In truth, The Salutation is substantially more than your average B&B – an 11-bedroom stately home built by Sir Edward Lutyens in 1911-12, it is the first 20th-century house to have been Grade I-listed.

It incorporates Gertrude Jekyll-inspired gardens (marketed as The Secret Gardens of Sandwich), a separate four-bedroom house and two cottages. And now the whole pile been put on the market for £4.5 million.

Dominic Parker (of the ParkerSteel dynasty and whom you might have seen with wife Stephanie passing judgement on the evening's TV on Channel 4's Gogglebox) bought the property in 2004 after it had suffered more than a decade of neglect. He spent some £3m, and an awful lot of time, restoring it to its current glory.

So why, after all the hard work, are he and family looking to move on?

"We want to retire, really," he said. "We've got to the stage where it's quite an undertaking – it's almost as though we've turned it into a shop and we're now living above the shop.

"We did up the gardens because we thought they should be shared, while we bought the house as a home, but it's become more work than home. Now we'd like to have some time off, relax and go on a few holidays with the family – chill out a bit."

FOR SALE: The Salutation is very more than 'just' a stately home... it has beautiful grounds as well

And then what?

"I've loved doing the project and I'd love another project – although possibly not quite as big as this."

The B&B is still "fully operational – the full thing", says Mr Parker, who in 2011 saw a peak of some 28,000 visitors, many of whom would have savoured the tea room or bought plants – a lucrative return from the gardens.

Although no one has yet travelled to The Salutation with a view to buying it, Mr Parker says the "feedback from the estate agent [Knight Frank] has been quite exciting... whatever that means in estate-agent speak".

With children still at school in the county, the next "project" will be in Kent, so presumably Parker eyes are peeled for any such possibilities, but, as he says, "we have no idea of when, how or if it [The Salutation] will sell", so such a venture may be some time off.

You assume there must be heartache in the leaving behind of such a place, but Mr Parker hesitates.

"Yes and no, really," he said. "I love the place, but I'm getting old [he's a whopping 49 this year] and I now wear glasses – I spend about 40 minutes a day looking for the damn things.

"When I go to bed, it takes a long time to close everything down – everything's a long way away. It takes about 45 minutes.

"I'm on my feet all day long. We employ up to 36 people and my home is my business.

"I suppose we're lucky enough – we fell in love with the place and we've brought it back to where it is now. There are no complaints."

If you would like to buy The Salutation, phone Knight Frank on 020 7861 1552 to find out more and arrange a viewing.

Not in the Army now: six homes with a rather special history

ON PARADE: The six remaining former MoD homes at Chattenden Lane to go on the market can be viewed at an open day

A RANGE of properties with a difference is going on sale this spring as the last in a batch of former Army homes go on sale in Medway.

Ten of the 16 family properties at Chattenden Lane, Chattenden, have already been sold and potential buyers will get the opportunity to view the remaining six during an open day on Saturday, May 4.

The houses, which were formerly family homes of officers from the Royal School of Military Engineering based at Chattenden Barracks, have been released in phases by Annington Homes. This is the final tranche following earlier releases in March and April.

There has been an impressive refurbishment and buyers will get to enjoy new baths, showers, dishwashers, fridge-freezers, ovens and carpets.

In short, there has been "a complete redecking", said David Fleming, of LSL Property Services, the company that manages the agents (in this case Your Move) selling the former Ministry of Defence (MoD) homes across the country.

It might all seem a little complex at first, but LSL is essentially the 'middle man' between the MoD and Annington, the company formed to buy the country's stock of military married quarters.

Most of the houses were still occupied at the time of sale to Annington – indeed many still are by Forces personnel and their families.

Having been bought by Annington, the homes are then leased back to the MoD, which uses them until they are no longer required. At that point, they are given a new lease of life and put on the open market.

"The MoD is really the sitting tenant – when it doesn't need the homes any more, they are released," said Fleming. "The prices and the level of refurbishment are determined by what condition they're in and the basic need of the local market.

"There are guide prices – here they are £165,000 for the three-bedroom semis and £200,000 for the four-bedroom semis.

"There were 40 viewers on the first open day [in March]. A few were from London, but most were local. The refurbishment lifted the homes and local family buyers have really taken to them."

Annington became one of the country's largest owners of residential properties when it bought more than 57,000 married quarters from the MoD in 1996. Since then, it has managed their regeneration and subsequent return to the national 'open' housing stock – thus far, some 17,000 homes have been sold.

The open day at Chattenden Lane on Saturday, May 4, runs from 10am to 1pm.

You can visit www.annington.co.uk/properties-for-sale/kent-chattenden-chattenden-lane for more details on the properties, or phone Your Move on 01634 253322 if you would like to attend the open day.

Technology upgrade is a sign of the times

AYLESFORD'S Royal British Legion Industries (RBLI), which supports service personnel, has invested more than £250,000 to modernise its sign printing business, ahead of the Government's launch of new road signs for tourist destinations.

It is now just one of three businesses in the UK which can produce the new designs and is hoping to land a lucrative contract as a result.

From July, the brown heritage and tourism signs will be revamped as part of a strategy to boost the country's tourism.

Sites will then be able to swap their existing old brown signs for new ones that can include a full colour photograph.

RBLI, which provides training, jobs, housing and welfare support for members of the Armed Forces and disabled and vulnerable people, already produces signs for the road and rail industries.

Now, the purchase of a new Zephyr Digital Printer means the charity can produce the improved tourism and heritage signs.

The new signs will be made of flexible, reflective polycarbonate which makes them visible even in semi-darkness.

Robert James, commercial manager, said: "Investing in the new technology is a quantum leap forward for RBLI's social enterprise business.

"Not only does this investment mean we can produce the new tourism signs, it also enables us to further improve quality and shorten the length of time it takes to make our existing range of signs – reducing the cost to the organisation overall."

Hundreds of jobs to go as Coke bottling group swings the axe

By Chris Britcher
chris.britcher@archant.co.uk

UNION bosses have described plans by fizzy drink giant Coca-Cola Enterprises to axe hundreds of jobs in the UK – including some who work at the Sidcup site – as a "devastating blow".

The firm said nearly 300 jobs could go, with sites hit including Bristol, East Kilbride, north London, Northampton, Sidcup and Wakefield. In total some 288 redundancies could occur.

The Sidcup bottling plant has been up and running for more than 50 years and been a major employer in the local area.

A spokesman for Coca-Cola Enterprises said: "Following a strategic review, we are proposing to end our direct delivery service in Great Britain. This service is primarily used by foodservice outlets and we have identified the need for a more efficient way of distributing our products.

"We have now started a full consultation on these proposals with our employee representative bodies and the Unite trade union. If these changes were implemented they could result in the loss of approximately 288 roles from a total workforce in Great Britain of 4,400.

"We do not make these proposals lightly and we will, of course, be looking to minimise redundancies as far as possible and will offer support to help colleagues through this process."

Union Unite, which represents around 160 of the drivers and warehouse workers set to lose their jobs, says it will be "seeking greater clarification" of the full impact.

STRATEGIC REVIEW: Coca-Cola Enterprises is consulting to cut 288 jobs across Britain

Unite national officer for food and drink, Jennie Formby, said: "This news will be a devastating blow for our members and their families, especially in the current economic climate of austerity, welfare cuts and now rising unemployment.

"It is too early to make a detailed analysis of the announcement. However, our immediate priority must be to get full details of the reasoning behind this decision and to examine what alternatives there could be for our members.

"Cola-Coca Enterprises is a highly profitable and successful global company and we will be doing everything in our power to protect jobs."

The news comes just days after the Coca-Cola Company announced profits were down 15 per cent due to a sales dip in the US and Europe.

THE COMPANY

Coca-Cola Enterprises (CCE) spun out of the main Coca-Cola Company in the mid-1980s in a bid to consolidate its independent bottling groups.

Today, it is the world's third-largest independent Coca-Cola bottler and has sole licensing rights to bottle products of the Coca-Cola Company in Belgium, France, the UK, Luxembourg, Monaco, the Netherlands, Norway, and Sweden.

CCE makes, sells and delivers a host of products, among them Coca-Cola, Diet Coke, Coke Zero, Fanta, Dr Pepper, Sprite, Schweppes, Schweppes Abbey Well, Glacéau, Relentless, Powerade, Oasis and 5 Alive. It also makes, sells or delivers Monster, Appletiser, Ocean Spray and Capri-Sun on behalf of other owners.

Law Society honour for future president

SOLICITOR Jonathan Smithers will reach the summit of the legal profession in three years' time when he takes on the prestigious role of president of the Law Society

The 50-year-old is a partner with CooperBurnett in Tunbridge Wells and has been named as the next deputy vice president of the body.

He takes his place in July and 12 months later becomes vice president before the following year being automatically elevated into the top job.

The Law Society is recognised as the world's foremost body when it comes to regulating any legal system. It represents 160,000 solicitors from England and Wales working around the world in an industry worth £28 billion a year nationally.

"The British rule-of-law is the most respected around the world, so the Law Society is very big on the international stage," said Mr Smithers. "It is the regulatory and representative body for all solicitors and is particularly important to the City of London. Because of the regard for British law elsewhere in the world many companies maintain overseas offices so its influence is huge."

The top offices in the society, which has its base in London's Chancery Lane, are open to self nomination and 100 members are able to cast their votes.

Mr Smithers heads up the residential property team at CooperBurnett. He joined the firm in 1984 as a trainee lawyer, qualified in 1986 and became an equity partner in 1990.

He achieved success in the Law Society election against four other candidates.

The three top posts follow one another automatically and in the first year a deputy vice president is expected to give 25 per cent of their time to the role and 75 per cent to their practise. This rises to 50-50 when the next rung of the ladder is reached and to 100 per cent in the year as president.

"Effectively I have taken a three-year sabbatical," said Mr Smithers. "I was delighted to be chosen and even though I thought I had a good chance it is a great honour, both for myself and for CooperBurnett."

The Law Society is responsible for putting into effect the policies solicitors in England and Wales are required to follow. It has 22 committees that regulate all aspects of the legal profession.

Times look good for University of Kent in administrative excellence

SERVICE: Can uni lift prize?

THE University of Kent has been shortlisted in the Times Higher Education (THE) Leadership & Management Awards.

It is in the running in the category for 'outstanding departmental administration team'.

This award aims to recognise outstanding work in departmental administration, with excellent communication and balanced delivery based on the needs of students, academics and university central administration among the judging criteria.

The university is in the running for its Service Excellence initiative which looks to utilise a wide range of resources, including improving relationships with students and ensuring a sufficient response to service users.

The winners will be announced at a special ceremony in London, due to take place on June 20.

Summer short course programme is launched

A SERIES of summer short courses is once again available through the University of Kent's Tonbridge centre.

The Avebury Avenue site runs the courses throughout the year, with the summer programme getting under way in the coming weeks.

They range from courses on British propaganda during World War II to introductions to topics as diverse as Homer's Iliad and minerals. See www.kent.ac.uk/tonbridge.

Students get special treatment from police

A TEAM from Kent Police attended MidKent College's Medway campus to help assess public services students enrolled on a training programme for special constables.

Specials are volunteer police officers who have full police powers, uniforms and equipment and work alongside regular officers.

Lecturer Kat Topps said: "We are proud of our relationship with Kent Police and grateful several specials and assessors visited."

FRESH: Academy's ambitious designs for new buildings came to fruition when they opened in February

Oasis adds academy to its UK roster of schools

ONE of the largest education providers in the UK has become the lead sponsor of the Isle of Sheppey Academy.

Oasis Community Learning already backs some 28 academies and will replace Dulwich College as lead sponsor.

However, the college will continue to support the academy, along with the other founding partners.

The academy opened in September 2009 and replaced Minster College, Cheyne Middle School and Danley Middle School.

Since then it has seen a steady increase in academic performance although a recent Ofsted said it "needed improvement".

It hopes teaming up with Oasis will see it push on further.

Lord Turnbull, the chairman of governors of Dulwich College, said: "We are proud of the work that has taken place since 2009, particularly now that the students have access to such amazing facilities in the new buildings.

"We recognise that the pace and extent of progress now needs to be accelerated. In order to take the academy to the next level of achievement, we believe that greater work must be done in developing stronger relationships with the wider community, including feeder primary schools.

"Dulwich College, along with co-sponsors Kent County Council and the Diocese of Canterbury, believes this can be best achieved in a new partnership, with Oasis as the lead sponsor but which the founding sponsors will continue to support.

"Over the past 25 years, Oasis has demonstrated a developed understanding of the workings of communities and has pioneered a range of services across the country that help tackle people's needs in an integrated manner."

All the parties to the original foundation of the academy, and the Department for Education, say they are committed to supporting Oasis in carrying forward its work on Sheppey.

Dr Joe Spence, the Master of Dulwich College, says "It was always part of our plan to help in the transformation of education on Sheppey generally rather than simply sponsor one school, and we are delighted Oasis has the resources to ensure this within a far shorter timeframe than we could envisage.

"I also see Dulwich's partnership with one of the major academy chains as a model which should encourage more independent schools to see how they might support the academies programme and make the sort of difference to the maintained sector that they all claim to want to make."

Steve Chalke, founder of Oasis, says: "In our hubs across the country, we have seen that you cannot raise standards just by focusing on what happens to a young person between 9am and 3.30pm – you have to be involved in the whole of their life, and this means working with parents, carers and other parts of the community."

What is your business doing to help Keep Kent Working? Do you send employees on training courses to aid their personal development or run apprenticeship schemes? If you have a good-news story, email editorial@kosmedia.co.uk or call us on 01303 817000.

Plumber aims high in national contest

A PLUMBING apprentice from K College has found himself in the final of a national competition and in sight of a £1,000 top prize.

Jon-Marc Sullivan spent the Easter college holidays on campus in Folkestone practising what he will need to do for the Grand Final of the National Apprentice of the Year competition, which is being held at Swindon College on May 8-9.

And should he triumph, he could be in with a chance of taking on plumbers from across the world in a WorldSkills contest later this year.

Mr Sullivan, 24, from Ashford, has been studying the level two NVQ diploma in plumbing and heating which is being run over two years with one day release.

His lecturer, Tim Wilson, said: "As a more mature student he has been able to grasp the subjects slightly easier than the rest of the group and he has been able to offer help to his peers.

"The company he works for was set up by his grandfather, Sullivan Plumbing & Heating, and they concentrate on very prestige installations that include multimillion pound water boats and renovation work, so he has inherited some skills as well as working hard to improve them."

Parks work together to build a strong foundation for economy

Special KoS Report Nick Ames examines the way Kent Science Park and the Discovery Park are working together to boost employment

IN ADDITION to traditional industry, there is a growing desire to reinforce the local economy's backbone by attracting hi-tech businesses to the county with top-end employment opportunities.

The blow caused by Pfizer's decision to pull out of much of its Sandwich operation exposed just how significant it can be.

The loss of thousands of jobs was not only felt in the local economy and supply chain, but in housing too, as many looked to move out of the area in pursuit of specialist positions elsewhere.

But the county must be on its guard to ensure foreign investors do not come in, hire skilled workers, then promptly decamp elsewhere.

That is the view of James Speck, the man who is entrusted with the future of Kent Science Park (KSP) in Sittingbourne, which alongside Discovery Park, Sandwich, is looking to bring technology-based industry into two areas which have seen significant economic downturns in recent years. Pfizer left east Kent while manufacturing operations in paper and other goods have declined across Swale.

Looking forward, KSP is set to invest £10.8 million into developing space at its current site and it also has a piece of land outside its fence where planning permission has been granted to build.

"The life science sector may be a small one in Britain when it comes to business property," said Mr Speck, who is site manager, "but it is set to be a high growth one in the coming years.

"It is an area the UK excels in. Although the last budget may not have raised much in the way of excitement generally, in terms of science and technology business, it delivered good news in the form of incentives to companies."

Both Discovery Park and KSP are looking to attract the same sort of business into Kent – life sciences, developing technologies, low carbon energy generating firms and pharmaceuticals, as well as media-linked, creative and computing specialists.

The Government's Regional Growth Fund has benefited both, with £35m available for east Kent and £20m for the north.

"If you are a realist, of course in some ways Discovery Park is a rival (to KSP)," said Mr Speck. "But you have to look at everything in a joined-up fashion.

"Whatever they do – or we do – it is going to have a ripple effect and that should mean more businesses coming to Kent."

THE FUTURE: Discovery Park in Sandwich and Kent Science Park in Sittingbourne are working together to bring new employers into the county

And when they come, they should be encouraged to stay, Mr Speck emphasised.

"It is vital to keep skills in the county," he said. "We keep talking about foreign investment. But what we do not want is companies to come in here and take the best of our skilled workforce away. If a business comes here we need it to stay for the long-term."

Discovery Park has the same approach. A spokesman said: "We are working together to make Kent the place to do business. Discovery Park supports all endeavours to bring investment to the region, resulting in benefits for the wider community and opportunities for growth.

"As a science and technology park, we offer a specific range of services and facilities, meeting a different set of requirements for businesses. I think Kent Science Park is subtly different to Discovery Park and that together we can offer something for everyone."

A sector of the life science business which has grown up in KSP is to do with food – set to become a pressing issue in the coming years as the world's population increases and its natural resources become even more strained.

Mr Speck said: "We have identified a growing cluster on site of businesses concerned with food protection and security as well as those developing technology which will make food safer."

He added that he was optimistic for the future of the region: "We've been through a very tough economic period but we've now got KSP, Eurolink, the waterside development in Medway, the Paramount scheme in Swanscombe and the whole Thames Gateway development."

Contracts tendered to small firms keep work local

The "trickle down" effect of high-tech businesses arriving at Discovery Park is being witnessed in east Kent.

The economic prospects of the area took a massive blow when Pfizer withdrew its operations – but there has been a turn around in recent months as companies start to lease offices and laboratories on the site. And when the park came under new management, bosses vowed they would use local businesses as contractors as much as possible.

So far the science facility has worked alongside around 70 east Kent companies, including fire systems installers, painters and decorators, dry cleaners and florists. Among the companies working with the park are Cardy Construction, Sandwich Cars and The Bell Hotel. Cafeteria food is provided by Wellards of Dover and Deal's Meat'In Place, while milk comes from a dairy in Hadlow and bread from the Wilmshurst Bakery in Ash. Launderies in Faversham and Thanet look after cleaning catering staff clothes.

And in its latest move to establish a new corporate image, rebranding of the park is being undertaken by two Margate businesses. DAT 1 and NE Signs are producing brochures, stationery, billboards, exhibition panels and conference information.

Dave Tappy, managing director at DAT 1, said: "When I heard Pfizer was to reduce its presence in Sandwich I saw this as a major loss to the area's economy. However, from DAT 1's perspective, I'm happy to say nothing could be further from the truth.

"Having met with the park directors on site mid-February, we were invited to tender for a range of promotional items to support the rebrand of the site. We have subsequently won valuable supply contracts that will make a real difference to our business.

"We are looking to build relationships with the growing numbers of new tenants that are moving to, or setting up, business."

NE Signs work on signage and has just completed the installation of an internal client directory for the main reception.

Nigel England, managing director, said: "The team have given us the flexibility to design and recommend solutions to meet their high expectations and standards and we are confident that the same relationship can be duplicated with new tenants as the business park evolves."

Jaguar sharpens its claws

IT wasn't so long ago that industry-watchers were reading the last rites over Jaguar, but the big cat's back.

And this week it sharpened its claws, launching surely its greatest sports car since the legendary 1960s E-Type roadster, described by Enzo Ferrari, no less, as "the most beautiful car ever made".

Some 50 years on, another eye-catching open-top two-seat Jag has arrived: the F-Type (from £58,500) offered with a 3.0-litre V6 engine delivering 340 or 380bhp, or a 495bhp 5.0-litre V8, all mated with an eight-speed manual/automatic gearbox.

It attracted awards ahead of launch, including the World Car Design Of The Year 2013, beating 42 other nominees; were Ferrari still alive, he would no doubt be both purring at and cursing another classy Jaguar rival.

He would have liked the F-Type's long wheelbase and short overhangs that, together with a roadster's classic front engine/rear-wheel-drive layout, hint at excellent handling balance and poise.

But the F-Type is not just about on-road presence; attention to design continues with a fighter-plane cockpit interior, with controls grouped ergonomically according to function and a joystick-shaped SportShift gearbox selecter. And the outer skin hides a high percentage of weight-saving aluminium, a construction Jaguar has pioneered since the XK coupé and convertible arrived in 2006.

Despite technical sophistication, though, some critics say the car looks expensive against Porsche's Boxster (from £37,589), but Jaguar prefers to see its new car as a cut-price rival to Porsche's long-running flagship sportster, the 911 – open-top versions of this start at £79,947.

For well-heeled car fans, though, price considerations surely fall behind the attraction of buying a British rather than German sports car on merit, and one highlighting Jaguar's resurgence of the past decade.

Underlining this, the brand has already launched the XF Sportbrake (from £31,940) this year, an elegant sporting-estate variant of its big-selling XF saloon.

A scorching flagship version of the latter, the XFR-S, priced from £79,995 and capable of 0-60mph in just 4.4 seconds, arrives later this year, too, while two further Jaguar R performance models have been unveiled: the director-level XJR saloon and XKR-GT coupé.

No wonder Ian Barrow, dealer principal of Lancaster Jaguar in Sidcup – the UK's biggest Jaguar dealership – was bullish about the launch: "Customer inquiries about this car started two years ago, many from existing Jaguar fans, but also from buyers of our rivals – we will definitely take business from Porsche.

"We can be proud, too, that this fabulous new car was launched globally here in the UK, emphasising Jaguar's British roots."

ROAR: It's been a long time coming but the new Jaguar F-Type looks to be worth the wait as it brings more style and sophistication to our roads

DON'T LIKE

... waiting more than 50 years for 'the new E-Type', but then you could also argue that the aggressive-looking F-Type was worth the wait.

NOT SURE

... Porsche 911-buyers will be convinced the F-Type is a true rival until they road-test one. Jag-dealers sound confident about the result.

REALLY LIKE

... the heady concoction of great styling, superior technology and, underlying it all, an equally emotive connection with Jaguar's past greatness.

THE WRAPS ARE OFF.
APRIL 2013 AT LANCASTER JAGUAR.

The new F-TYPE is the most thrilling sports car of its generation. Powered by a choice of supercharged engines, the strong, light body and balanced, agile chassis deliver an intensely rewarding driving experience. And its sensational lines make it a true Jaguar sports car. The F-TYPE arrives 25th April, and our launch event is going to be something very special.

Santa Fe scales new heights

By Steve Loader
editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

HYUNDAI'S original Santa Fe was the Korean marque's first SUV and is credited with establishing the marque in the US – the nation that sparked the 4x4 SUV craze.

It helped having a name evoking the famous Santa Fe Trail, a gruelling 900-mile Wild West trade route – Santa Fe means 'Holy Faith' in Spanish, so you get the picture. And the car has lived up to its rugged namesake and Hyundai's robust five-year/unlimited-mileage warranty.

The new third-generation Santa Fe upholds the tradition but has also gained more style, with lines apparently inspired by a gathering storm. Whether or not you can pick this out, it's clear that this latest Santa Fe is an eye-catcher and well priced, too.

OK, it's not quite the bargain it was; the previous range started at about 23 grand, while the newcomer begins at £25,495 and that's the two-wheel-drive-only version tested here.

But Hyundai is not the 'cheap as chips' marque it once was; the brand's quality hike over the past five years has been impressive and, even if badge snobs remain unconvinced, hard-nosed post-recession buyers know good cars when they see them.

The Santa Fe still offers five or seven seats, but you can now buy a more economical front-wheel-drive version. Safety kit has also been boosted, with an active hood to aid pedestrian safety (the first on a Hyundai), a lane-departure warning system that's a potential lifesaver in 'tired driver' situations and seven airbags.

Rear load space is a class-best 534 litres with the front five seats upright, and all rear seats can be flopped down quickly with a one-touch release to create a huge (1,680 litres 2WD version) and almost-flat cargo area without a lip to worry about when loading hefty items.

Five seats or seven? The test car was a five and I know from a previous drive that the extra chairs on a seven-seater are only suitable for kids to access and get comfortable in, and with a miserly view out. So, weigh carefully whether to pay the extra £1,200 for a seven-seater.

Turning to what you don't see, Hyundai's shift from value to aspirational brand is also shown by a lightweight/high-strength steel and aluminium body, contributing to deft handling for a car of this bulk. There is some body-roll on the bends, as expected from most SUVs, but the Santa Fe grips well, with excellent refinement and ride comfort – the chassis engineers have got it about right for UK roads.

The car also features Flex Steer, launched on Hyundai's refined i30 family hatchback. This offers three steering settings – normal, comfort and sport – particularly effective for a larger car, where you want a light touch when parking but more feedback at higher speeds.

The cabin is airy and well trimmed and the dashboard well organised, though perhaps a bit uninspired on our Style-trim entry model

There's just one engine – a tweaked 197PS (195bhp) version of the 2.2-litre turbodiesel from the previous car and highly capable, even when towing up to the car's maximum 2,500-kilo braked trailer weight.

Hyundai has made the gearbox choice harder, though, with a lightweight and frugal auto for the 4x4 version, capable of returning 41.5mpg on the official combined cycle against 46.3mpg for the six-speed manual.

The front-wheel-drive eco version is offered with manual only, though, and offers 47.9mpg combined.

For me, the bargains are still the 4x4s: well equipped, smart, durable and comfortable, they are great value against some esteemed and less reliable rivals with posh badges – the smart money has known this for some time.

ON TRACK: The Santa Fe Trail more than satisfies our reviewer, ticking the boxes for image, style, space and good value, especially in its 4x4 incarnation

Are we there yet?

By Steve Loader
editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

PREDICTING an upturn in the UK economy has become like the first five minutes of that long road trip with the kids: frequent choruses of "Are we there yet?"

And the question is particularly relevant to the van market – a barometer for the state of UK plc.

Vans might be less visible and carry less than HGVs, but they oil the wheels of the economy by supplying local deliveries, servicing important sectors like construction and mobilising armies of tradesmen.

Hardly surprising, then, that when the recession tsunami hit us, 60 per cent of the sector's volumes were washed away in 2009 versus the previous year.

Since then, we've had many false dawns for both the economy and this crucial market, but the gloom cannot go on much longer, especially as some existing vehicles are very tatty and need upgrading.

And figures from motor-industry mouthpiece the SMMT suggest that more users may indeed be buying: van registrations rose 11.5 per cent to 43,684 in March and grew 11.7 per cent during the first quarter of 2013, helped by pick-up sales, which are currently also up almost 11 per cent (see inside).

BCA (British Car Auctions) has also reported a hardening of used-van values, which is usually good news for new-van sales: big fleets feel confident about upgrading because they recognise they will get more for their disposals, but it also means smaller operators will choose to buy new rather than pay over the odds for a used van.

BCA says shortage of stock continues to be the key factor for values as businesses retain vans for longer, but group general manager for commercial vehicles Duncan Ward pinpointed another possibility: "With redundancies across a range of business sectors from retail to manufacturing, many people will be tempted to strike out on their own and one of the first things they will buy with their redundancy money is a van."

SOUNDS GOOD: A new van speaks 'volumes' about your business – as Mercedes-Benz and hi-fi brand Pioneer proved with this DJ concept van. Left, pick-ups like the Mitsubishi L200 help pick up the market.

But is a used van the answer for these buyers? With advantageous lease deals and buying plans, a new van also offers the latest comfort levels, lower operating costs from new powertrains and various loading options and configurations such as the Dualiner-type vehicle that can seat five and still carry a decent cargo.

Then there's the feel-good factor: if you are a start-up concern, a new van will make you and your customers feel good about the business.

Top gear shift for vans

THEY may still look like boxes on wheels but vans have undergone a quantum leap in design and comfort over the past decade.

Operators have seen economy, efficiency and flexibility soar, while drivers now enjoy better performance, refinement and safety.

Many such benefits have come about because of crossover designs from cars.

Initially, this was confined to smaller models derived from hatchbacks; blank out the rear windows and replace rear seats with a load floor and the driver gained all the benefits of the equivalent car-owner, including aircon and a decent sound system

But the philosophy has since transferred to larger vans, sometimes now derived from car platforms, too, even if the van body is bespoke.

Load capacities have also widened, varying from as little as three cubic metres for a courier's car-derived hatchback right up to a 17 cubic-metre delivery van.

Access has improved, too. Many larger vans have low floors in the driving compartment for easy access and most vehicles above supermini class now come with a sliding side-door as standard to aid loading – many buyers also opt for a second 'slider'.

There is now a choice usually of side-opening twin doors or a high-lift tailgate, as well, while cab doors generally have a reduced opening angle, making it easy for busy drivers to grab the handle to close the door yet also avoid it swinging wide and hitting something.

On the performance front, petrol-driven vans have all but been displaced by the better economy, range and low-down pulling power of four- and five-cylinder diesels.

Extended service periods, lower maintenance costs and longer-lasting parts then further compound the benefits of diesel.

The engine's partner, the gearbox, has also changed. Six-speed manuals are the norm – two cogs better than only a few years ago – but urban operators are turning increasingly to automatic, semi-automatic or clutchless transmissions.

These can usually be driven with manual selection anyway but are ideal for stop-start urban traffic and all those small internet-order deliveries – and they can be as economical as a manual.

Van safety has also gained from the car market; along with driver's airbag and the option of passenger, side and front-curtain airbags, there are active safety features including anti-lock braking (ABS), traction control (TCS), braking control (EBC) and electronic stability programme (ESP).

Step-up 'pick-up truck man'

YOU'VE already heard of 'white van man', but is there now another road-going species – pick-up truck man?

Sales of pick-ups – also known as 'utes' (utility trucks) and 'bakkies' in other parts of the world – have rocketed in the UK lately, illuminating an otherwise gloomy small-commercial-vehicles market and they are still rising: registrations are currently almost 11 per cent ahead of a year ago.

The unanswered question, though, is whether this popularity is due to tax anomalies making the pick-up attractive to private users or whether commercial operators see them as relatively cheap yet capacious recession-busters, available with two- or four-door cabs and – in the case of 4x4 models – able to go most places on a farm or construction site.

Could it be also that traditional off-roaders lack the capacity and have become too gentrified? Or do the interlopers cater for an inner desire to wear a check shirt, jeans and cowboy boots?

And there is no need to rough it, either; dealers find buyers want 'up-spec' double-cab versions that can take the family at weekends, complete with camping gear and so on, all secure and weathertight beneath a removable hard-top cover for the rear loading bay.

But not every buyer of a pick-up wants all the bells and whistles of big-sellers like the Mitsubishi L200 – the vehicle that sparked the pick-up boom – which is why Fiat launched a cost-effective version of its award-winning Doblò Cargo van.

The Doblò Work Up is a 'dropside' vehicle with compact external dimensions suited to towns, though Fiat says it appeals to the agriculture, construction, maintenance or city-parks-services sectors, too.

BIG-SELLER: Mitsubishi L200: high-spec customised versions like this four-door Trojan model kick-started UK pick-up demand. Above, if you need pick-up flexibility rather than bulk, the Fiat Doblò Work Up could be the answer.

But this isn't the vehicle for would-be Marlboro Man private buyers and we asked Sittingbourne accountant Ray Backler, of small-business specialist Capsa Accounting, about the tax appeal of buying a 'rough-tough' pick-up:

"Company-car tax is onerous, but the tax regime for vans recognises that most people need these for business, so the burden is more modest. Many in business do not realise that pick-up trucks, including the family-friendly double-cab variety, are classified as vans for tax purposes rather than cars."

Merc's new baby... a van for the city

By Steve Loader
editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

YOU wouldn't normally mention Renault and Mercedes-Benz in the same breath, but they are speaking the same language with the latter's new Citan small van. Or are they?

Sure, the new baby Merc has the profile of the Renault Kangoo upon which it is based, but the French design has been well and truly 'Merc'd' to ensure that it can slot in below M-B's bigger Vito and Sprinter panel vans – this is no simple re-badge job.

Cosmetically, the similarities are there once you look beyond the big M-B badge, grille and headlamps – a sharp contrast with the Kangoo's low-key front end – but the interior is up-spec and there has been much work on refinement, handling and interior trimming.

This means the Citan hits the heights of its sister models as a good place to be for a long day behind the wheel; the level of refinement and easy operation of controls is high-class and electronic stability control comes as standard.

Along with the usual M-B slow depreciation, all this easily outweighs a slightly higher up-front price from about £13,000.

There is also great variety in the configurations with compact, standard and long wheelbase versions and various door options. Apart from the standard panel van, there are five-seat Dualiner and Traveliner minibus or MPV variants, too.

Dualiner is a format that has proved particularly popular with owner/operators buying M-B's Vito as they can use it for family outings while still stashing tools and kit in a load compartment behind; for those would-be buyers who couldn't quite aspire to the Vito Dualiner, this must be the answer – it might even find a niche with the surfer and sporting community.

The Citan might also be the answer to Mercedes-Benz-dealers' prayers. The newcomer's name – an amalgamation of City and Van – says it all: this is the vehicle they craved to complement the Vito and Sprinter, both big-sellers in the UK but sometimes too big for some operators or missing a little brother to include in fleet orders.

Make way for the white van ma'am

By Steve Loader
editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

WHITE van man has a mate – white van ma'am.

According to a survey, we need to change our perception of who is behind the wheel of the white van speeding by in the outside lane of the motorway.

That person is no longer someone with discarded drinks bottles and a copy of The Sun, open at page three, stuffed behind the windscreen and carrying a bull terrier as his navigator, but an altogether more discerning individual – and quite possibly a woman.

Astonishingly, the survey from AXA Business Insurance also showed that he or she is likely to be an opera-lover (43 per cent) and more than 60 per cent have not been booked for a traffic offence in the past 10 years, despite more than half spending at least 10 hours a week behind the wheel.

An AXA spokesman said: "Commercial-van-drivers have been given a pretty bad reputation over the past decade, but the stereotypes around them couldn't be further from the reality.

"We're finding that as more and more women are driving vans, coupled with a higher degree of professionalism among the van-driving community, the stereotypical perception of a 'white van man' is fast becoming a thing of the past."

CHANGE: Contrary to popular belief, vans don't all come in white – silver is popular, too. Pictured above is Fiat's flagship Ducato panel van and Peugeot's mid-range car-derived Partner model

It seemed clear from the poll that most van-drivers object to the white van man stereotype; well under half (39 per cent) reckoned it was accurate, but only 8 per cent owned up to being that man.

In any case, a third of the drivers surveyed were women, which might or might not explain why cooking and gardening were high on the list of hobbies, although it seems there are some pastimes that go with the job – 82 per cent of those interviewed regularly go to a football match or watch one live on TV... hopefully not while driving.

My Harley is not a mid-life crisis... I just wanted to treat myself

KOS Media has teamed up with Kent batsman Michael Powell for a column throughout the 2013 season in which the Welshman will give an unrivalled insight into life on and off the pitch with the county.

I've done a column before back in Cardiff when I was with Glamorgan before I joined Kent last season. I will try to give an honest appraisal of where we are going with the team and what's going on in the changing rooms, behind the scenes and on the pitch.

I've got different stuff I do off the field, when I'm not playing cricket for Kent. I've got a Harley Davidson, which I try to get out on as much as I can.

I try to get away from cricket when I'm not playing. I like riding my Harley to Bristol when I'm at home, but I don't bring it to Canterbury because I've got all my gear – it's too far, really.

When I do get back I take it out as much as I can. It's my first bike and I've always wanted one. I had my benefit year at Glamorgan before I came to Kent and I've always wanted a Harley, so I thought I would treat myself.

Someone asked me if I was having a mid-life crisis, but it's like someone else buying themselves a car. It is a big bike, but it's loud. The louder it is, the safer it is, because people can hear you coming.

Back to the cricket and I think we were undercooked going into the first game, because we didn't get out as much as we wanted.

The weather was just a nightmare – the games we did play it was great to play, but it wasn't quality practice where we had a long day in the field.

Because we got two days in the field, I think the boys got more battle-hardened – hopefully that put us up to speed for the season. In a strange way that was good prep.

At Leicestershire it was great for Keysey [Rob Key] to get a hundred. Hopefully, that will tally as the season goes along. He is definitely a lot fitter than last year. He has lost a lot of weight, but he has trained very hard in the winter.

He is one of our best batsmen, if not our best, so you would expect him to score a lot of runs. He's a good player. When he scores 100, it's not a big deal – that's the mark of a good player. We are lucky to have him so focused – whether he's captain or not, he's an asset to any team.

There is a lot of off-the-field stuff that goes on as a cricket captain that people don't realise goes on.

When you're captain of a cricket team you control everything, unlike football or rugby. You have a say in everything – there's a lot more to the job than meets the eye.

Our new captain James is good as gold. He's a hard-working, honest cricketer and he leads by example. He sets a good example, does big Treds, so it bodes very well for the team.

He is quieter, but his work ethic is exceptional and the boys respect that. He is more of a look-and-follow-me type of captain.

Tunbridge Wells set for

Manager Martin Larkin and chairman Joe Croker talk to Greg Miles

MARTIN Larkin admits that his Tunbridge Wells side will have to be at the top of their game if they are to overcome three-time Northern League champions Spennymoor Town at Wembley next Saturday.

Just a week separates Wells from their mammoth date at Wembley in the final of the FA Vase, when the Kent League side will be backed by more than 9,000 fans in the capital.

They are just the second side in the county to ever reach the final, following Deal Town's 1-0 win over Chippenham Town in 2000.

Manager Larkin, 32, has had little time to reflect, with a backlog of league fixtures that has left his side playing as often as five times a week.

Fortunately, there is just one game this week, on Monday at home to Cray Valley PM, before their date in the capital.

It means the squad will be able to train together on Tuesday and Friday before making the trip to their hotel in Windsor on Friday afternoon.

The opponents, heavily favoured by the bookies, who have priced them at 1/6, are the latest in a number of sides from the Northern League to grace the final in recent years and Larkin is well aware of the threat they pose. In fact, Wells knocked out the holders, Northern League side Duntston UTS, in the fourth round.

"If you look at the records for non-league clubs at step 5, Spennymoor are unbelievable," he said. "We have beaten teams in that league already, but we're under no illusions that we will have to be at our very best on the day.

"To win that league three times in a row is fantastic, but if you want to win the cup you have to beat the big teams."

The final preparations have been done for their trip to the stadium, with Larkin keen for his side not to get too distracted on the day.

"Most of the guys have got Thursday and Friday off work," he said. "We will meet up on Friday and go and see the pitch and get their photos done then so that on Saturday we are focused and ready to go.

"We have got a really nice hotel booked in Windsor near Eton Dorney. It's 45 minutes from the stadium. A lot of the hotels the FA wanted us to stay in were near the ground, but we wanted that drive in to see the arch and get excited.

"There's a lot going on before the game, with the build-up, the national anthem and the mascots. We need to make sure that when that whistle goes we are fully focused and not too excited."

With every player wanting to play in what is the biggest game of their career, choosing the side is going to be tough for Larkin.

One piece of good news is that big striker Andy Irvine, who has scored seven goals in the cup run, should be fit for the final after being stretchered off against Woodstock Sports on Tuesday night with a back spasm.

"It's a little emotional when you think about what they could miss out on," said Larkin. "We have got four centre-forwards – we have got some tough choices to make.

"We have got to get the right combinations, it's not just about individuals. That's where the main discussion point lies, but anything can change before then."

Off the pitch, chairman Joe Croker has been busy organising all the extra fixtures, but he allayed fears that the players would not be fresh, insisting the adrenaline rush would make up for any fatigue.

"It's been a couple of the most hectic weeks we've ever had at the club – trying to sort out all these games while thinking about Wembley is hard," he said. "But we've all stepped up to the plate. I can't imagine that anyone playing at Wembley won't be fresh – there's no chance they won't be at their best and putting in 100 per cent."

The might of their opponents also means nothing to Croker, who believes Wells are more than a match for Spennymoor.

"History means nothing, does it? Dunston won the Vase last year and we knocked them out," he said. "It's about what you do on the day. They're a good team, but so are we.

"Outside of family, this has got to be the number-one achievement – to be a part of this is very special. Everyone wants to talk to you all the time. There's a thousand and one tasks to do."

Croker became chairman four years ago, having previously been a season-ticket-holder at Crystal Palace, but he became disillusioned with the professional game.

"From where we were four years ago to where we are now is a great leap," he said. "Four years ago on a Tuesday night we would be lucky to get 30 people here, but now we get 100 as a minimum. We are a building club."

THE OPPOSITION

- Durham side Spennymoor Town have so far sold about 4,000 tickets.
- They have won the Northern League title for the last three years.
- They average home gates of 320 at their Brewery Lane stadium.
- Their chairman is former Aston Villa player Bradley Groves.

Fans urged to donate to help save the Fleet

TALKS about the future ownership of Ebbsfleet United are continuing following Myfootballclub's decision to relinquish its shares in the club.

Last weekend the club's owner, web-based membership group MyFootballclub.co.uk, voted to hand over its shares, agreeing on the idea of transferring three-quarters of them to fans' group the Fleet Trust and the remaining quarter to Ebbsfleet director Phil Sonsara.

While the process of transferring those shares is under formal discussions between the club's directors, the Fleet Trust, and MyFC, the club needs to raise some £70,000 before the end of May.

TAKEOVER TALKS: Ebbsfleet United owner Myfootball-club has voted to relinquish its shares in the Stonebridge Road side Ebbsfleet United director Jessica McQueen said: "At least £20K is required immediately. The club is actively seeking further investment but needs these funds and more over a slightly longer period until new investment has been achieved.

"Donations can be made over the telephone, by cheque in the post, or calling at the club office. The club is open daily between 9.30am and 5pm, Monday to Friday."

The relegated Blue Square Premier club is still in discussions with interested investor Carlos Kabir Karani. The 38-year-old from the Canary Islands and four other investors are looking to buy out MyFC and then use the club as a development platform for talented young footballers.

IT FEELS A BIT SPECIAL

JOURNEYMAN striker Richard Sinden is relishing a date at Wembley to add to his impressive non-league CV.

The 34-year-old forward was a trainee at Nottingham Forest before moving to Aston Villa, but injuries ended his professional ambitions. He has since turned out for Sittingbourne, Hythe, Ashford, Maidstone, Herne Bay, VCD, Faversham, Canterbury and Whitstable before joining Wells last summer.

"You just feel like this is a squad that could achieve something. It feels a bit special," he said. "I've only ever experienced that with two clubs who have won things. It's a rare feeling.

"I've seen the race of champions at Wembley and Soccer Aid there. It's just a dream from a young age. To achieve it is phenomenal.

"I had a slight realisation about it when watching an advert on TV where they come out of the tunnel, but I don't think it will sink in until we get there."

WE'RE ON CLOUD NINE

THROUGH thick and thin, Shirley Brown has been supporting Tunbridge Wells since 1946.

Since the age of four she has watched the Wells home and away and did not think in her wildest dreams she would see her side make the trip to Wembley.

The 71-year-old said: "We are not interested in Premiership football – we are interested in the grass roots, the honest endeavour.

"Through thick and thin, whether it rains, snows, or frost, we are here.

"We didn't believe that after all these years of supporting them we would get to Wembley. We're still on cloud nine.

"It's going to be quite a day, a day to be remembered. Even if they don't win, just getting to the final is quite an achievement."

Allen revelling in title glory but thoughts are on Wembley trip

GILLINGHAM manager Martin Allen is targeting a trip to Wembley next season as he looks to build on the momentum from winning League Two.

The champions play their final game of the season this weekend at Burton Albion, but Allen already has one eye on next season and has started the recruitment process.

Not content with just consolidating in League One, he wants to challenge for a place in the play-offs and win at Wembley.

"That was one of the best days of my life walking out from that corner flag [to receive the trophy]. I want that again," he said. "I want to be the manager of a football club that's progressive.

CHAMPION: Martin Allen wants that title-winning feeling with Gillingham again

Picture: ADY KERRY

"I've had to fight all my life, but not once again after that feeling last week. I've ordered all my big posters and pictures, with my big fat face, and my tie on and in the background it says 'Champions'. I want that again and to be there again. I don't want that to be the only one in my whole life.

"I said it from day one: I don't want to go up and mess about. This club went up before and got relegated – I don't want that. I got relegated with Cheltenham Town – it was horrendous. I want to win at Wembley. I've told you something there, haven't I?

"There's clubs in the top 10 we can beat and go past with good recruitment now. Then we can go to Wembley and win. That will be the focus from me and the staff. We won't aim for the play-offs – we will win at Wembley. I've lost in the play-offs in the past and it's rubbish.

"Can you imagine me at Wembley? And when we win that, then we can go on a bus [tour]. Everyone thinks I'm mad."

He admitted he had already started looking at adding to his squad for the new season, and he will be telling his current side where their futures lie on Friday when they return from their three-day trip to Benidorm.

"We have got a head start and it does make it easier," he said. "Everyone knew we were going to go up – that was obvious – but then the next challenge after that was to win the championship.

"We are sitting here as champions – strange, isn't it? But we have got to go again. I've listened to Sir Alex Freguson all these years saying make sure you have a good celebration but then get back to work and get back on it.

"I will not speculate on any signing, or on 'I've seen him and my mate down the fish shop said he's seen his brother and he said he saw his aunt and uncle and he's going to get that player'.

"Everything I do will be private, interviewing players, finding out about them and their families, and seeing if they can fit into our culture, and if they are going to improve us."

Canterbury finish in third spot in play-offs

CANTERBURY secured third place in the Women's Hockey League play-offs with a 3-2 win over Surbiton.

Canterbury's hopes of securing a place in European competition ended on Saturday when they lost 5-1 to Reading, but they restored pride with a hard-fought win over Surbiton on Sunday.

Canterbury's Grace Balsdon said afterwards: "Obviously, yesterday was disappointing for us, but after the game we regrouped and turned our focus back to today and getting the result and we are really pleased with the outcome.

"It was a tough match – Surbiton are a great side and been very competitive since coming up to the Premier Division."

Rowers pipped to the podium at GB trials

HERNE Bay's Dan Ritchie and Ashford's Tom Ransley were involved in a thrilling finish to the men's pairs final at the Great Britain Rowing Team Senior Trials at the weekend.

The duo, racing at trials for Leander Club, were pipped to a podium place in the dying few strokes by their GB team-mates Alan Sinclair and Nathaniel Reilly O'Donnell.

Their fourth-placed performance, though, will keep them in contention for a leading boat as they enter the seat-racing and crew-formation phase of this year's trials process.

"I knew they were there and we just couldn't hang on," said Ritchie, who missed out on a place at last summer's Olympics through injury.

Skipper Barrett voted Gills player of the year

IN last week's paper we asked you for your vote on Gillingham's player of the year for this season.

And we can reveal that Gills skipper Adam Barrett took the honours with a hefty 56 per cent of the voting from the five nominees we put together.

He finished above right-back Matt Fish, who came second with 32 per cent, while Danny Kedwell came third, followed by Deon Burton and Myles Weston.

Barrett has been a rock at the heart of the Gills League Two title-winning side, who have conceded just 36 goals before their final game of the season, at Burton Albion this weekend.
